New Pennsylvania Food Regulations Dissected

In Only Few Respects Do They Change Pennsylvania Status of Food Adulteration. Candy Men Have Lemon. Status of Preservatives Unchanged from Old Law. The Question of Retailer's Guarantee.

A more careful study of the new food regulations issued by the Pennsylvania Dairy and Food Department several days ago, and published in the last issue, shows that in very few points do they alter the legal status of food adulteration in the State of Pennsylvania.

Take the regulations one by one:—

Coal-tar dyes, particularly those which are admitted by every body to be injurious, were illegal under the old Pennsylvania law, and in fact are illegal under any food law the writer has ever inspected. Hence the present regulations making them illegal is simply in accord with the former status.

The ruling that benzoate of soda used in connection with coal-tar dyes will be regarded as an adulteration makes no change in the status, as the presence of the dye would have made such a combination illegal under the old law. Under the old law the legality of benzoate of soda alone was never clearly established, and under the new Federal food law its legality has never been established. So that when the new rules leave open the question whether benzoate of soda is legally permissible alone, they simply restate the condition that existed before.

Rule 2, regarding the use of boric acid, salicylic acid and sulphites, or any poisonous preservative or coloring matter, introduces no new condition, since all these substances were proscribed under the old law.

Rule 4, stating that spices containing foreign matter will be considered adulterated, is of course obvious, as spices containing foreign substances have always been deemed adulterated.

That part of Rule 5 covering ice cream is particularly liberal, since it prescribes only 12 per cent. of butter fat, as against the Federal Government's 14 per cent., and permits the use of eggs and gelatine, which the Federal standard does not.

The candy men do not like Rule 6, which forbids the use of mineral substances in confectionery, whether poisonous or not. Coal-tar dyes are mineral substances, so that even the admittedly harmless ones may not be used. This restricts the confectioners to the use of vegetable dyes, which are nowhere near as satisfactory as coal-tar colors.

Rule 7, as to misbranding, is practically a summary of the Federal rules and regulations. It prescribes a form for the principal label, in which it goes beyond its legal rights, as does the Federal regulation along the same line. Neither the Federal nor the State authorities have the right to interfere with a label that does not misrepresent, and the user of such a label has the right to put on it exactly what he likes.

The other regulations under Rule 7, as to misbranding, simply condemn and warn against conditions which were illegal before. Notably the use of the word "compound" on mixed foods and the use of descriptive names which shall not misrepresent the character of the goods.

The regulation regarding the labeling of prepared mustard with the names of all the ingredients and the percentage of mustard is new in Pennsylvania. Query: does this not offend against every man's inviolate right to hold his formula secret?

Under the same rule, imitation or adulterated flavoring extracts must not trade as the genuine, which they could not do under the old law.

The regulations regarding the form of guaranty to be demanded by the retailer were discussed in the last issue. As stated, the retailer who already holds a guarantee of purity under the Federal food law need not secure another under the State law. The department will accept his Federal guarantee as credentials of immunity under the State law.

Still Insists That He Can't Get Good Groceries in the South

Purchasing Agent for Panama Canal Groceries, Answering Protests of Southern Jobbers, Says Groceries Bought in New Orleans Were in Part Unfit for Food. Has to Go to New York to Get Good Goods, He Says.

Special correspondence of "Grocery World."

New Orleans, La.,
June 26, 1907.

Several weeks ago a communication published by the "Grocery World" from this point stated that the wholesale grocers of New Orleans and other Southern points were deeply incensed over a statement which the New Orleans "Picayune" had published from Henry Burnett, purchasing agent for the food supplies used in prosecuting the work of the Panama Canal. In this statement Mr. Burnett was quoted as having said in substance that he could not get decent groceries from the Southern jobbers, but was compelled to go to New York for them. Naturally this greatly aroused the jobbers of this section and a large party of them went to Panama to make things hot for Mr. Burnett.

In the party that sailed from New Orleans were twenty-two men from New Orleans, one from Shreveport, six from Alabama, three from Mississippi and one from Indiana. Every line of business directly interested in the trade of the isthmus was represented. The grocers of New Orleans were represented by George P. Thompson, first vice-president of the Southern Wholesale Grocers' Association and first vice-president of the New Orleans Wholesale Grocers' Association; Max Schwabacher, Paul E. Mary, George Camors, J. B. Carnal, A. Dumser, D. Gradwohl and Victor Burthe, and J. A. Van Hoose, of Birmingham, president of the Southern Wholesale Grocers' Association, was also in the party.

Immediately upon the committee's arrival a letter was handed to them from Burnett, which reiterated all his charges against the quality of New Orleans groceries and gave specifications. The letter was as follows:—

Gentlemen:—An interview given by me to the representative of the New Orleans "Picayune" on February 12th, and which was published in that paper on February 23d, having been given considerable prominence by the New Orleans press, by members of your association and by merchants, and it having also been announced by the press that your party contains representatives specially delegated to refute the statements which I have made, I have the honor to invite the members of your party, singly or in a body, to visit the commissary store of the Panama Railroad Co., at their convenience, where I am prepared to substantiate with samples of goods received from New Orleans every statement which I have made regarding the quality of those goods, and the seeming inability of New Orleans merchants to purvey to this market.

For your information, and as bearing upon the question, I beg to inform you that on February 4th, eight days before the date of this interview, a trial order was placed by the purchasing department of the Panama Railroad Co. with various New Orleans merchants with a view to ascertaining if suitable service could be obtained in that market. These trial orders were to be made in two shipments, the first to leave New Orleans on February 16th and the second on March 2d. The names of the merchants to whom orders were given on the basis of their bids and the approximate value of the orders are as follows:—

Woodward, Wight & Co.	$780
A. Adler & Co., Limited.	232
Albert Mackie Grocer Co.	91
H. T. Cottam & Co.	513

Not a single one of these firms, with the possible exception of H. T. Cottam & Co., made shipment of the goods in the quantities and description of packages called for in the award. The latter firm made shipment of cream of wheat in ordinary domestic pasteboard packages. My requisition called for the same in sealed tins, but I am not prepared to say that the omission was not the fault of our purchasing department.

On March 1st the Albert Mackie Grocer Co. notified our purchasing agent in writing that the company was unable to deliver its second installment of the order, for the reason that although when its bid was put in on these goods, they had been in stock, they were now out of stock, and could not, therefore, fill the order. The installment in question consisted of thirty or forty cases of string beans, one case pumpkin and three cases peaches.

On an order calling for shipment of fifty barrels and thirty half-barrels of flour, Woodward, Wight & Co. shipped sixty-five full barrels, paying no attention to our specification that a portion should be shipped in half-barrels.

A. Adler & Co. substituted for Heinz catsup, in pint bottles, the same brand of catsup in what is known as a small octagon bottle, containing much less than the nominal pint.

Your attention is respectfully called to the list of canned goods appended hereto, samples of which will be cheerfully opened at the commissary store for inspection by your party. The majority of these goods we still have on hand, for the reason that the quality is so poor that they are not saleable in this market.

Your attention is also called to the fact that practically all of these goods are packed either in New York or San Francisco territory, instead of New Orleans territory, and that they can undoubtedly be imported by us cheaper from one of the two first mentioned ports.

In view of the inability of four of your representative merchants to correctly fill with suitable and standard goods during a period of over three weeks orders aggregating slightly over $1,600 in value, you are requested to suggest some practical method by which purchase of a portion of our supplies, the monthly importation of which amount to about $120,000, can be satisfactorily accomplished in such a market as New Orleans.

I am respectfully,
HENRY BURNETT.

Attached to Mr. Burnett's letter was the following "partial list of goods received from New Orleans which are unsuitable for this market":—

Lard—From H. T. Cottam & Co. Unstiffened and put up for domestic trade in unsealed tins not suitable for tropics.

Catsup—From A. Adler & Co. Bottles not pints as specified in bid and award, and not put up for export with corks and screw tops.

Peaches—From Albert Mackie Grocer Co. Very inferior "Pie Peaches" in rusty tins used to fill order for preserved peaches.

Mince Meat—From H. T. Cottam & Co. Nominal weight two-pound tins, quality very poor, contents weigh twenty ounces, or five ounces less than standard two-pound tins sold in New York.

Strawberries—From A. Adler & Co. Tin contains thirteen ounces water and five ounces of pale strawberry mush. Absolutely unfit for consumption.

Succotash—From A. Adler & Co. A large number of tins were bulged and fermenting when received, evidently old stock.

Sifted Peas—From H. T. Cottam & Co. Very inferior quality.

Stringless Beans—From Albert Mackie Grocer Co. Nominal two-pound cans. Very inferior quality, cans only three-quarters full, containing ten ounces water, eight ounces beans.

So far as can be learned, the New Orleans jobbers were unable to answer these charges, but claim to have won a victory through the fact that from now on the groceries for the isthmus will be purchased through the Commissary Department of the United States Army.

Wholesale Grocers Discuss Trade Topics

Summarized Report of the National Wholesale Grocers' Association, President in Annual Address Contends That the Jobber Is Indispensable to the Manufacturer. Committees on Discounts, Guarantee of Purity and Free Soap Deals. Secretary Green, of the National Retailers' Association, Says Jobbers Are Partly Responsible for Antagonism Between Jobbers and Retailers. Pure Food Law Situation.

The National Wholesale Grocers' Association held its annual convention in Chicago on Wednesday, Thursday and Friday of the past week, June 26, 27 and 28. Delegates were present from thirty-two States and the entire session was enthusiastic. A detailed report of this convention is impracticable, but the "Grocery World" has prepared a comprehensive summary of the proceedings from a mass of matter sent by a correspondent. This summary contains all the salient points of the session interesting to the retailer.

The annual report of Alfred H. Beckmann, secretary of the Wholesale Grocers' Association, showed the strength of the organization. He said in part:—

The National Wholesale Grocers' Association of the United States was organized in the city of Buffalo, N. Y., on the 6th of June, 1906, with 123 members. At this writing we have 490 members, distributed in thirty-two States, as follows:—

What the "Scott" Label Means

PURITY
STRENGTH

We have become interested in Ceylon Tea, whose supremacy is fully acknowledged by everyone who knows the subject. We believe in these teas so thoroughly that from now on we will make a specialty of them.

We will put up under our own label Ceylon Teas, both black and green (uncolored), in their purest state and in their highest grade.

The fact that they will be under the "Scott" label sufficiently assures that the teas will be of the finest flavor, having both delicacy and strength.

Within the last few years much effort has been expended in educating the tea dealer and the tea user to the use of high-grade Ceylon Teas. This rapidly-increasing class will find something to exactly suit them in our brands.

We want to impress upon the trade the fact that once a customer tries Ceylon Teas no other will suit.

The above membership represents about 85 per cent. of the distribution of manufactured articles in the territory covered, and indicates also that the "objects" of this association are appreciated by wholesale grocers, as there has been little so-called missionary work done to influence memberships.

President Judson, in his annual address, contended that the jobber is the only legitimate distributing medium for the manufacturer. This portion of his address was as follows:—

We are the medium through which the manufacturer should distribute his product and under present conditions we are indispensable to him. The wise thing for us to do is to so direct our business policy as to render unnecessary the creation of other channels for the distribution of manufactured commodities. We will thereby accentuate our necessity to the manufacturer, and be in a position to stand up like men on the dignity of our usefulness and importance for just and equitable treatment. The sooner the manufacturer recognizes his limitations on the one hand, and we recognize the necessity for sustained and self-sufficient effort by ourselves on the other, the sooner will mutually satisfactory relations be established and maintained. I doubt not that the manufacturer often wonders that we voluntarily handle his product at so small a margin of profit, and even refrain in some cases from maintaining the profit specifically provided for us by the manufacturer's selling policies.

We should also exercise a large measure of charity in our dealings with the retailer. He has his troubles and annoyances which must not be overlooked. The demand for ever quicker service, smaller and more attractive packages, new and diversified commodities, compounds and preparations, is a matter in which we should be leaders and not followers. By anticipating these varied wants of our customers our originality and usefulness are emphasized and our trade prestige enhanced and perpetuated, and the hard labor required in achieving these results is only the reasonable price that we must expect to pay for the exalted position that we occupy in the commercial economy of the nation.

The reports of the committees on various trade topics were especially interesting. Major Samuel Mahon, of Ottumwa, Iowa, chairman of the Committee on Soaps, presented the report of his committee as follows:—

The Soap Committee concluded that it was wise to wait after the opening of the current year till there had been effected a better organization and consolidation of the association. Accordingly, the chairman called his committee in Chicago on March 12th. The question of the abolition of free deals by manufacturers was discussed and urged by all those present upon Mr. French. He steadfastly refused to entertain the proposition, however, and the meeting adjourned without visible result. The chairman, however, believes that the strength of the national organization was impressed upon Mr. French and may bear fruit in the future. The other two propositions of the committee that the manufacturers distribute their product through the jobbers and also that the manufacturers insist that their specialty men obtain a list for their goods were freely conceded by Mr. French.

Your committee find a general opposition among the soap manufacturers to the abolition of free deals. Your committee believes that were the enforcement of the rule made required of manufacturers to elect whether they will distribute their product through the jobber or direct to the retailer and the insistence that manufacturers' specialty salesmen be compelled to obtain list, that a great reformation over the present methods would be accomplished. We believe that the time for enforcing this rule should not be postponed later than this meeting. Insistence on the last rule, however, implies that the jobber should observe the same rule.

S. B. Steele, chairman of the Committee on Uniform Discounts, rendered its report substantially as follows:—

The subject of discount is of vast and vital importance to every wholesale grocer in the United States. The term "discount" while common is misunderstood. A "cash discount" as used in connection with business is "an allowance made on an account for advancing money upon a bill not due."

This committee found that a great many of our members make a practice of deducting discount to which they have no right, either morally or legally. As an illustration, if a bill of goods is bought on 60 days' time, or 2 per cent. for cash in 10 days, the terms mean that if the buyer has the money in the seller's hands in 10 days, the seller agrees to allow 2 per cent. for the use of the money for 50 days, or the unexpired time. When the money is not in the hands of the seller within the specified 10 days, the buyer has no right to deduct the cash discount. It is neither fair nor honorable. Your committee has been shown that the abuse is more general than would be supposed. If the Discount Committee is to be successful along the lines of improving discount conditions, the wholesale grocers of the country must do their part in seeing that the terms of payment are lived up to.

The field which the committee had to work is very fertile and will amply repay the members for any loyalty and assistance they show the committee. The committee reported that it had been unable to accomplish all it wished to, but submitted a long and influential list of concerns which had agreed to allow members of the organization discounts.

W. B. Timms, chairman of the Committee on Pure Food Guaranty, submitted a report. He said his committee, which had been appointed at Buffalo February 12th, had remained in practically continuous session on February 13th and 14th, and finally, "after numerous meetings and discussions with the committee appointed by the Canned Goods Packers' convention to confer with us we agreed upon a form of guaranty which was reported to the Canned Goods Packers' convention in open session and adopted by them by a unanimous vote. A copy of this guaranty is attached:—

The guaranty has been used very generally between canned goods packers and wholesale grocers. It has been formally adopted by a number of the Canned Goods Packers' Associations, including the Baltimore Canned Goods Exchange.

The committee have but two suggestions to make in connection with this guaranty:—

First, that it be used universally by the members of the National Wholesale Grocers' Association, and Second, that the clause under the head of "Buyer's Labels," reading, "Whereas, the ——— of ——— has filed his guaranty to protect purchasers of food products with the Secretary of Agriculture at Washington and the same has been registered under serial number ——" be stricken from the guaranty as unnecessary and in many cases causing confusion to one or the other parties of the guaranty; when all of the packers have filed their guaranties in Washington and procured serial numbers this clause will be a proper part of the guaranty, but until such time it is a cause of confusion and unnecessary correspondence and discussion; as it has no important bearing on the guaranty it can be omitted without impairing its value. I am confident there will be no objection on the part of the packers to this omission.

COPY OF THE GROCERS' FOOD GUARANTY.

The copy of the food guaranty follows:—

NATIONAL WHOLESALE GROCERS' ASSOCIATION OF THE UNITED STATES.
FOOD GUARANTY.

Packers' Label.

I (we), the undersigned, do hereby guarantee that the articles of food or drugs manufactured, packed, distributed or sold by me (us) are not adulterated or misbranded within the meaning of the Food and Drugs Act, June 30, 1906.

Buyers' Label.

When buyers' labels are used, the following contract shall be made a part of the guaranty:—

WHEREAS, The .....of..... has filed his guaranty to protect purchasers of food products with the Secretary of Agriculture at Washington, and the same has been registered under serial number ....;

IT IS HEREBY AGREED, In consideration thereof, between..... (buyer) and ..... (seller) that whenever buyer shall furnish his own labels and direct seller to attach the same, then and in that event said .....(buyer) agrees to assume all liability and save the seller harmless from any damage, responsibility or expense arising out of any illegality of form of such label, resulting in misbranding under the provisions of the Food and Drugs Act of June 30, 1906.

PROVIDED, HOWEVER, That this contract shall not be construed so as to release the seller from any of the obligations arising from the wrongful use by the seller of buyers' labels, which are legal in form, thereby resulting in misbranding.

Secretary John A. Green, of the National Retail Grocers' Association, made a stirring address, in which he deprecated the antagonism which to some extent existed between jobbers and retailers, and contended that for a part of this, at least, the jobber was responsible. Mr. Green said:—

The wholesalers should endeavor to prevent the sale of goods in wrong places and at cut rates. If wholesalers extend credit, the retailers ask that it be extended in such a way that it will not be used as a means of cutting prices and demoralizing trade.

That there is a feeling of antagonism we have ample proof. In some of our large cities we find that it has been impossible, through a misunderstanding, no doubt, to control the situation as it probably ought to be, and that one or the other of the different factions have been compelled to utterly discard the jobbers and go direct to the manufacturers. I am not here to say how these matters should be straightened out, but to call your attention to the fact that some means may be thought out during this convention whereby a better understanding can be brought about.

It is but recently that in one of our large cities one of the wholesale houses has bought up a large number of stores. Another instance has come to my notice where a wholesaler had gone into a number of small towns and bought up a store in each of them.

You probably know these facts as well as I, and yet I feel that it is my duty to bring them before your notice, so that if you are not cognizant of the facts, that you might know and give the matter some consideration at your convenience.

At Thursday's session Mr. F. W. Hannahs, of New York, offered a plan for financing the organization on a basis of a sliding scale of membership fees and of raising for the work of the association a fund of $30,000. The committee proposed that firms enrolled as members and rated at less than $50,000 pay a fee of $10 annually, those rated at from $50,000 to $100,000 pay $20, those from $100,000 to $200,000 a fee of $40, those from $200,000 to $300,000 a fee of $100, and those over $300,000 a fee of $150. This was evidently a suggestion of immense satisfaction and of marked equity, and some of the largest concerns represented spoke enthusiastically of it. One of them, however, proposed that a higher class be established, comprising firms rated at $500,000 or over, and some of those affected thereby made speeches favoring even that. The convention voted to make the grades as proposed, with the two amended high grades added.

BELL'S SEASONING

has always been one of the speediest selling specialties a grocer handled. One thing—it has such a tremendous field. Every family in the land uses dressing for roast meat and poultry.

Sometimes—if she doesn't know or hasn't tried Bell's Seasoning—the housewife makes her own seasoning. Very often it is good, but many, many times she doesn't hit it, and then the palate protests.

Bell's Seasoning never varies, and because it is made on a famous recipe it always exceeds in deliciousness the best efforts of the housewife.

You'll never stop selling this if you once begin.

Not the Profit.

In advertising a special brand of package coffee last Monday, Gimbel Bros., the only Philadelphia department store selling groceries, close with the following:—

> The profit on the coffee isn't what we're after, but it's another way to prove the excellence of the grocery service.
> —Chestnut-street Annex.

Oh, no, these arch hypocrites "aren't after the profit"—certainly not! All who know the Gimbels know they are simply in business for the beneficent pleasure of doing good!

The California Grower's Way.

The description published elsewhere of the way in which the California raisin growers have opened the door to the importation of several hundred thousand boxes of foreign raisins is simply in line with many previous charges of the same sort. The California fruit growers have always been too greedy and probably always will be, as no lesson seems sharp enough to convince them that their selfishness is standing in their own light.

Nobody has been more spoiled by the tariff than the California fruit growers. Protected by a high import tax on everything they produce, they have asked for their products far more than they were worth, and in many cases far more than the public were willing to pay. That is the foolishness of it—the California growers have repeatedly put prohibitive prices on their goods. Take olives. There was no demand for California olives in the East. People were perfectly satisfied with imported olives. Yet the California growers asked the public to do something which they had not the slightest inclination to do, and to pay exorbitantly for the privilege. Naturally they refused to do it, and as a result there is no business to speak of in California olives. Had the price been fair—the experiment made easy, so to speak—the Californians would unquestionably be selling ten times the number of olives they are to-day.

Still, the California producers have never waked up to the logic of this, and it seems too much to expect simple common sense from them.

"After Hours."

There is no curbing the greedy merchant. He can circumvent all efforts at early closing or Sunday closing or limited prices, no matter how closely hedged about they may be with restrictions. Read the following item from an English contemporary:—

> On the door of a certain shop in Wales, writes "The Grocery World" man in the "Principality," there is a notice giving the hours of opening and closing. At the end of the notice, however, appears the following:
> No objection to > serving customers
> after Business Hours.

The poor grocer who perpetrated this isn't wholly responsible—he simply can't help himself. To let a cent's worth of trade escape would seem to him a crime against himself which would keep him awake for nights.

"Imitations."

A large number of the leading weekly and monthly publications of the country, in a wholly praiseworthy effort to combat what they refer to as the "substitution evil," have been concertedly publishing in recent issues the following matter:—

> "JUST AS GOOD" IS NOT THE GENUINE.
> Genuineness is the basis of honesty; it is the very spirit of honesty; it is the finished product of honesty. That which is not genuine, yet wears the stamp and signet of genuineness, is flatly dishonest. Our whole social fabric is built upon this truth, and yet a large part of present-day society gives itself up to imitating and imitations. Expert chemists and artificers devote their experience and skill to devising substitutions for the real thing. Scientists, artificers and merchants of every sort spend more time reckoning with the imitation than it would take them to solve the problems involved in making and marketing the real.
> Take one flagrant instance: A business concern spends untold energy and capital in building up the sale of an article. They advertise it broadcast, and, by dint of energy and square dealing, succeed in gaining the confidence of the public, giving a good article at a fair price and making their trade-mark stand for honesty and quality. Immediately the imitator appears—and the general public buys the imitation, instead of using that careful discrimination which a tried friend has a right to expect.
> This thing is attacking the moral fibre of our people, for the "substitution evil" enters every avenue of life. There is need for a strong voice crying in the modern wilderness, demanding that, whether in the magazine advertisement or in phases of personal life, the genuine be permitted to stand upon its own hardly-won pedestal until displaced by something better.

This sounds quite plausible and impressive, but what is meant by "imitation"? In the light of the above it might mean two things: 1, a product aimed to deliberately steal the capital of another—alike in name or in label; or, 2, simply another product encouraged by the success of the first to go after a share of the market. Naturally there is no defense for the first form of imitation, yet the little sermon above reproduced is so broadly framed as to include both. In that it is wrong, for the second form of "imitation" is not only justifiable, but a sorely needed form of competition. Is a manufacturer to have a perpetual monopoly of the chocolate market simply because he introduces the first brand of chocolate? For if there are never to be "imitations" in the second sense, the result will be monopoly as tight as any ever perpetrated.

Finances of National Retailers' Association.

Comfortable Surplus Above Debts. Begging Over. New England Retailers Organize Against Mail Order Schemes.

Special correspondence of "Grocery World."

Cleveland, Ohio, June 28, 1907.

During the last two years there has not been any appeal made to the retailers for funds for support of the National Retail Grocers' Association other than the per capita.

The year 1905 we promised to run the association on the funds of the retailers, and when an appeal was made there came into this office scores of letters bringing dollar after dollar to the amount of nearly $900, and L. J. Callanan, of New York, sent $25, with the understanding that if we continued the same policy he would continue to give the same amount yearly.

This same feeling and determination exists to-day as then.

Our debts amount to less than $500 (with the exception of salary for the secretary, which must not be taken into account), while the treasurer's report of June 1st shows $842 in the treasury.

It can be truthfully said that at no time in the history of the National Association has there been so much good effort put forth as now, and the results are satisfactory.

Pursuant to the call issued by Elisha Winter, who has been organizing New England retail merchants' associations, a number of the merchants of the country met at the St. Johnsbury House to organize a county association.

Before adjournment the following resolutions against the mail-order houses were adopted and will be sent to Congressman Haskins:—

> Whereas, Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont and Massachusetts have each organized State associations, in affiliation with our national association; and
> Whereas, The State associations in the West and Southwest have been carrying on very successful campaigns in opposition to the unfair competition of the catalogue houses; therefore be it
> Resolved, By the retail merchants of Caledonia County, in county convention assembled at St. Johnsbury, Tuesday, June 11, 1907—
> First. That we call upon New England State associations to get together in defense of New England's interests and combat by every honorable means the further encroachment of the western catalogue houses; and,
> Second. The New England merchants cannot successfully meet this competition without lowering his standard of commercial ethics.
> Third. It is not to the interest of New England to concentrate the retail distribution of merchandise into the hands of mammoth foreign corporations thousands of miles away.
> Fourth. We call upon our representatives in Congress to continue the successful opposition carried on by our national association for the past seven years against all attempted parcels post legislation so far introduced in Congress.

Preservation of Eggs with Water Glass Now Easy and Effective

United States Government Indorses It and Gives the Results of Some Experiments. Eggs Can Be Kept for Years in Water Glass Without Spoiling. After Being Kept Months They Cannot Be Distinguished from Fresh.

Special correspondence of "Grocery World."

Washington, D. C.,
June 28, 1907.

The Experimental Department of the United States Department of Agriculture has been busying itself with an investigation into simple methods of preserving eggs of late, and in a report issued during the week says unhesitatingly that eggs can be preserved in a solution of water glass so as to keep in perfect condition for a long time.

Experiments are reported in which water-glass solution, a brine made of lime and salt, and a commercial egg preservative were tested. In these experiments eggs kept in good condition for home use for at least eight months when preserved either with the water-glass solution or with the lime and salt mixture, but considering cost, quality, appearance, flavor and other characteristics the water-glass solution is preferred by the experimenters.

Particular interest attaches to the data recently published by J. Hendrick, of the University of Aberdeen, as he examined a very large number of eggs preserved in water glass under commercial conditions and also made special studies of the quality and composition of eggs thus preserved for long periods. In general, the preserved eggs were found to be of good quality, though they had not been preserved under the best conditions, as they were not placed in the water-glass solution on the day on which they were laid, but were collected in the country and sent into town in large lots and were two or three days old before preservation. As might have been expected, some of these eggs were bad, but the proportion was not large. In one instance out of 384 dozen eggs preserved between April and June and sold between October and December only 5 dozen, or 1.3 per cent., were bad, and the majority of these were broken or cracked eggs.

Usually the eggs which were preserved in water glass have a nice appearance, as the shells are very clean and fresh looking after the water glass is wiped off them. Even those which had been several years in water glass had a fine, fresh appearance. Another advantage of preservation in water glass over certain other methods is that the contents of the egg do not shrink owing to evaporation. The eggs therefore do not rattle when shaken, no matter how old they are. The cost of preservation is very small.

It was found that eggs which had been kept in water glass for a few months could hardly be distinguished in appearance, flavor and smell, either raw or cooked, from what are called "fresh eggs"—that is, fresh eggs in the commercial sense, which are eggs which should be free from decomposition or taint, but which may be several days old. A really fresh egg, only a few hours laid, is easily distinguished in flavor and appearance when cooked from the "fresh egg" or preserved egg, and is known as a "new-laid" egg. The eggs which had been preserved in water glass for about six months tasted and smelled like well-kept eggs a few days old. As the eggs in question were a few days old when they went into the water glass, they were not appreciably changed to my eye and palate by a few months' stay in water glass.

As the eggs get older, however, a distinct change is found which can be appreciated both by the eye and palate. Eggs which have been three or four years in water glass are easily recognized. The white becomes pink in color and very liquid. The egg acquires a slightly peculiar taste which * * * suggested soda. At the same time even when four years old the eggs had no unpleasant taste or smell, and the white coagulated in the usual manner in cooking. Though there was a slight characteristic odor when the eggs were cooked, it was not a stale or bad odor and did not suggest sulphureted hydrogen. The changes in the preserved eggs take place very gradually. At one year old they are hardly noticeable; at two years they are distinct, but not so distinct as at three or four years old.

"It's All in the Shreds"

If you eat Shredded Wheat you will know how good it is; and when you know how good it is you can offer it to your customers with confidence and enthusiasm. If you could see us make Shredded Wheat you would never eat any other cereal. Take a package home with you. For breakfast, heat the biscuit in oven until it is crisp, pour hot milk over it, then add a little cream and a dash of salt. For lunch or dinner try a Shredded Wheat Biscuit with strawberries and cream. In place of white flour bread eat toasted Triscuit, the Shredded Wheat wafer. You will then become a Shredded Wheat "booster"—and when you "boost" Shredded Wheat you are "boosting" yourself.

Shredded Wheat is as staple as granulated sugar. Contains more nutriment than corn or oats and is more easily digested. A steady seller at a good profit. Always Clean. Always Pure. Always Right.

To further test the effects of the preserving solution fresh eggs and eggs which had been kept in water glass one to three years were analyzed and it was found that there was practically no change in their composition even after lengthened immersion in the solution. Practically no silica and little, if any, soda found their way into the eggs. The eggs do not dry up and there is scarcely any change in their ash content, though they contain slightly more soda than fresh eggs.

Water glass is an ordinary chemical substance—sodium silicate—and can be obtained at any drug house. A sample of syrup-thick water glass contained 37.91 per cent. silica, 16.48 per cent. soda, and 0.14 per cent. potash, and a solution prepared for preserving eggs, 2.76 per cent. silica, 1.20 per cent. soda, and 0.01 per cent. potash.

The water-glass method of preserving eggs was introduced only comparatively recently. It has largely superseded older methods, and also appears to have led to much more frequent preservation of eggs on the small scale in households and by small traders. The method is simple and effective. The eggs are obtained when they are plentiful and cheap in spring and preserved for use during the winter months. In such cases it is necessary to keep them for about six months, but they may be kept much longer, for in the experiments referred to above some were left in a solution of water glass as long as four years and were not decayed.

The New York Letter

Based on Chicago Convention, Trade Discusses Jobbers' Probable Reprisals Against Manufacturers Who Sell Retailers' Co-operative Buying Organizations. Manufacturers Kicking Hard Against Forthcoming Prohibition of Benzoate of Soda.

Special correspondence of "Grocery World."

New York, June 28, 1907.

The delegation of wholesale grocers who went from this city to the jobbers' convention that has been in session this week in Chicago was the largest and most representative of any that has attended any similar meetings in the wholesale trade. The proceedings are being watched from this distance with interest by retailers as well as jobbers, as the questions under consideration affect every branch of the trade. The expressions of good feeling between jobber and retailer have been numerous. Officers of the retailers' associations say that this shows the right disposition all around and is promoted by the retailers maintaining strong organizations in order to protect their own interests whenever necessary. A prominent officer of the New York Retail Grocers' Union, whose views are usually representative, said that the jobbers are only likely to run counter to the retailers on projects to interfere with the activity and usefulness of the buying exchanges or in other ways to prevent retailers from buying from manufacturers.

When a manufacturer is disposed to sell to retailers or to retailers' exchanges, said this officer, it is useless for the jobbers to step between and try to impose arbitrary restrictions on the business. The jobber has his legitimate field as a distributer, but he can get no exclusive control of the trade.

The personal element in the grocery business has been emphasized of late by speakers at meetings of retail grocers, who say that more and more is it becoming evident that this is a source of strength to the corner retailer in competing with both department and chain stores. In fact, it is claimed people in the retail trade, who were for a time somewhat alarmed by the big store spectre, are now viewing such competition with equanimity. With the increased attention that the public now gives to the pure food question, it seems, the grocer who comes into personal contact with his customers and can intelligently assure them as to the merits of what he sells, has a decided advantage over the large corporation behind which is an individuality practically unknown. Frequency of deliveries and discrimination in giving credit are other advantages that the neighborhood grocer certainly has.

It has been noted in some parts of the city that imported canned goods and other articles of the higher-priced grades are being offered in stores, which as a rule do not sell much except the cheaper grades of these articles. The cans in many instances indicate, by the labels, that artificial coloring has been used, and the amount of chemical introduced is duly mentioned. It is said that there is some experimenting to ascertain how the public in different parts of the city, such as the suburbs and in neighborhoods with a large foreign population, will take to these labels. Of course, in the case of much of the foreign population, they may not read the labels. In this manner, also, left-over stock may be disposed of and future packs will be put up with a view to meeting the requirements of the food law and avoiding the necessity of using labels of this kind. In stores appealing to a more particular trade, the dealers are exceedingly careful in offering for sale any canned goods the labels of which might "get on the nerves" of the timid.

Benzoate of soda is getting to be the critical subject in the food law discussions, especially as to catsup, pickles, pie fillers, fruit syrups and soda water supplies. The National Association of Manufacturers of Food Products has been distributing statements on the subject. It has collected letters from a number of manufacturers, telling of the harm that would be done to their business if the Federal authorities prohibit the use of this substance. The catsup manufacturers, in some instances, say that their business would be ruined by such a prohibition. In all the letters it is agreed that the substance is harmless in the quantities used, that it is the best preservative ever discovered and there is no substitute in sight. Following are abstracts from some of the opinions:—

From the Van Camp Packing Co., Indianapolis:—

"Tomato catsup used as a condiment in the household must necessarily be prepared so that it will keep on the table after the cork is pulled for an average of a couple of weeks.

"We could not adjust our catsup business to do without a preservative. We would simply have to abandon it. As to how the prohibition of a preservative would affect our catsup business, which we understand to refer to the question of financial loss, we would say that we produce yearly upwards of a million gallons of catsup."

Frank R. Meyers, the president of the Triumph Catsup and Pickle Co., East St. Louis:—

"Since the introduction of State and national pure food laws the coloring feature of the catsup has been discontinued. Coloring was only used to please the eye, and to leave out this feature was found practical, as by quick boiling much if not all of the natural color of the tomato could be retained.

"But we have found no sure way of preserving the keeping quality of the catsup without the aid of an antiseptic. To sterilize it after the manner of canned goods or bottled beer is no solution of the problem, as that only carries the articles to the consumer, and in small packages that have to be consumed immediately on opening, and entails too great a cost for the container as compared with the value of the catsup itself."

W. F. Miller, of the Hyman Pickle Co., Louisville:—

"There is no question but what catsup can be sterilized and kept in good condition until the cork is drawn, at which time the sterilized catsup will spoil and there is a great deal more danger from sterilized food than there is from food containing a small amount of benzoate of soda, as there are a great many people who will eat this sterilized food after it is spoiled rather than throw it away.

"There is no way, however, to sterilize pickles owing to the fact that if they were put through a sterilizing process it would soften the pickles and render them worthless."

The United Retail Grocers' Association of Brooklyn is to give an excursion July 7th to Bellewood, N. J.

Another meeting of the Executive Committee of the New York State Association of Retail Grocers was held yesterday at Elmira, at which further preparations were made for the food show to be opened in that city July 29th, and for the State convention which will be in session from August 5th to 9th.

The Grocery Clerks' Union is keeping up an agitation for an earlier closing schedule in the trade. Some of the largest grocers are favorable and it is believed that many others who are now hesitating would favor shorter hours if they could be assured of their competitors doing the same. As in the case of Sunday closing, much of the difficulty comes because delicatessen dealers keep open at almost all hours and they compete with corner grocers in many lines.

The motion for a preliminary injunction instituted by the Havana Commercial Co., a subsidiary concern of the Tobacco Trust, against Austin, Nichols & Co., whereby the Trust sought to restrain Austin, Nichols & Co. from selling a brand of seed and Havana cigars known as La Coralina on the allegation that this title was an infringement upon the Tobacco Trust's Lo Carolina brand was dismissed in a written opinion, by Judge LaCombe in the United States District Court, for this Southern District of New York, last week. The decision is only temporary, but it refuses to restrain or forbid Austin, Nichols & Co. from manufacturing and selling their La Coralina seed and Havana cigars, for which there is a large sale.

FRED. A. MCGILL.

Still Working for Stronger Canned Goods Contract.

Another Argument from Maryland Canned Goods Brokers as to Why Canned Goods Sales Should Be as Business-like as Sales of Anything Else.

In another statement sent to the "Grocery World" during the week, Messrs. Strasbaugh, Silver & Co., the Maryland canned goods brokers, who apparently alone are conducting a campaign against the slipshod contracts which govern the relations between canned goods packers and wholesale grocers, as to the sale of future canned goods, urge another reason why sales of canned goods should be governed by the same rules which govern other contracts.

In part the argument is as follows:—

Since the present market has shown an exceptional advance and change since the making of a majority of contracts covering 1907 pack of corn and tomatoes, would it not be well again to consider the stability of these contracts as a whole and the possibilities that might naturally arise if the market should continue its upward course as well as the possibilities of a decline from the present or previous position. It, of course, goes without saying that a number of those interested in future contracts will stand to their agreements to the letter, some may squirm just a little and others may prove to be lively wigglers.

With a possible sale of over 5,000,000 cases future tomatoes and possibly sales aggregating nearly as much of corn, with an average variation of 10 cents per dozen, 20 cents per case, this means that $2,000,000 is somewhat in doubtful balance between buyer and seller and can it be considered that a cast-iron contract has been given for this amount wherein justness, fairness and business-like treatment can be expected without exception. If such transactions have been made as is customary in grain, hay, flour, cotton, tobacco, stocks, bonds, securities or real estate trading, would not more binding contracts have been expected and insisted upon by those so vitally interested in an amount of this size? Do canned goods men require contracts less binding than is customary with other operators? Does it not seem strange that those who have been pioneers and leaders in the canned goods industry have not heretofore felt the importance of better, more binding and more businesslike contracts, if for no other purpose than to avoid the veil of doubt and uncertainty, which necessarily tends to unsettle business calculations and perfected arrangements, which alone must be changed on account of a different aspect of the market? Would it not benefit jobber, broker and packer as well to have a regular form of contract, not worded as to the dictates of any whimsical buyer or seller, but a standard form of contract between responsible parties, who are well known to be able to perform the requirements thus embodied, and as present conditions are by no means the exception and the happening of once in ten years, is it not important that immediate action should be taken with an idea of conducting the canned goods business under the most approved, up-to-date methods of security? Instead of more lax customs than are recognized in dealing in any other commodity in the present age, why cannot business men say, "We offer," and the answer be, "We accept," and from that instant a transaction between men be known to have been consummated, absolutely binding on both to the full degree, without technicality or wiggling on the part of either, even though it may take hours and even days in the signing and full completion of the written contract.

The "Standard" Cereal.

There is only one standard in the cereal line and that is "Wheatena." Being the first on the market it is also acknowledged to be the best. No trouble with any dead stock with Wheatena, for when once introduced the call for it is constant. You should all know that Wheatena is the roasted kernels of hard winter wheat, cooked, sterilized and sealed. It is made by the Wheatena Co., 348 West Twelfth street, New York City.

THE GROCERY MARKETS

Tea.

The tea market has been active during the past week, chiefly for old teas. The market is apparently having a healthy reaction from the dullness which has marked it for several months. Stocks are low and the general situation is firm. New teas are particularly firm and high. Prices are being paid for almost everything. New Ping Sueys have opened on a basis above old Ping Sueys, and since the opening have advanced 1 cent per pound. Ceylons and Indias are unchanged, but the quality is showing steady deterioration.

Coffee.

The market for Rio and Santos coffee is exceedingly stupid. There is very small speculative interest, and the market is without quotable change. The syndicate is able to hold the market steady only because the public refuses to operate either way, despite strenuous efforts to interest the buying contingent. Dealers in actual coffee maintain the same standoffish attitude toward the market as the speculators in options, and will continue to do so as long as present conditions exist. The present demand for Brazil coffee is from hand to mouth, and there seems to be no escape for the syndicate, which must go on carrying its enormous load. Mild coffees are unchanged and steady, and so are Java and Mocha. The demand for all these grades is fair.

Sugar.

The raw market has reacted from its former decline, owing to increased interest taken by refiners, and sales have been made during the week at an advance of 1-16. Refined sugar is in good demand, owing to the advancing fruit season, and the situation is firm. The immediate future is entirely problematical, but an advance within the next few days would surprise no one.

Fish.

New shore mackerel have come into the market during the week and have sold readily around $12.75, in a large way. The supply up to date has been very light, as the catch is small and late. Norway mackerel are scarce, high and wanted. There are still some 2s and 3s, but 1s and 4s are about exhausted. Some new Irish mackerel have come forward and before they were interfered with by new shores sold freely at good prices. Cod, hake and haddock are all dull and unchanged. Domestic sardines are firm and in fair demand, prices unchanged. Imported sardines are steady to firm and wanted to some extent. Salmon is unchanged in price and steady.

Syrup and Molasses.

Glucose is unchanged for the week. Compound syrup is unchanged and in very light demand. Sugar syrup shows enough demand to prevent a surplus. Prices are unchanged. Molasses is in moderate demand at unchanged prices. The general demand for sweets at this season is naturally light.

Beans and Peas.

Pea beans are perhaps a shade easier than last week and in light demand. Marrows are also about 5 cents easier and quiet. California limas are unchanged and very firm, both coast and spot. Yellow split peas are unchanged on a $6.50 basis. Greens are scarce and worth $2.75. Green and Scotch whole peas are scarce and very high. Demand light for all.

Canned Goods.

Spot tomatoes have ruled rather quiet during the week. Jobbers refuse to anticipate their wants, and stocks are light, though there has been no change in prices during the week. There are still those among tomato authorities who expect an advance in spot goods before the new pack are available. The favorable packing weather eased off the market for future tomatoes, as reported last week, but prices have not gotten below 87½ cents, and bids for less than that have been rejected during the week. The activity in spot corn has subsided somewhat, as most buyers have covered their wants. Future corn is fairly active at unchanged prices, though many packers refuse to sell. Peas have eased off from 7½ to 10 cents, speaking of new-pack country brands. They have had quite a run down there, while the Baltimore market, on the contrary, is firm on a much higher basis than the country markets. Peaches are scarce and firm, the only demand being for pies. The Eastern crop of peaches is reported light, so that prospects point to a continuation of high prices. Apples are unchanged and

Window-Dressing Articles Wanted

For several months the "Grocery World" has been looking for the right man to take charge of its "Window-Dressing Department" and contribute a good, suggestive weekly article. We have tried several, but none was exactly what was wanted.

We will now attempt to get these articles from our subscribers, probably every one of whom has some technical knowledge of window-dressing. What we want is articles clearly describing window displays that can be made by the average retailer; not necessarily new or original—in fact, those which have been used successfully are perhaps preferable to all others.

For all acceptable articles, the "Grocery World" will pay an average price of $5 each. All matter sent in under this arrangement should be addressed to the "Window-Dressing Department." If drawings are also sent they should be made throughout in black ink (not pencil).

in fair demand. The small Baltimore line is unchanged. Packing is proceeding. A few new string beans are offered at 55 to 57½ cents, which is much lower than old stock. California canned goods are unchanged. Some little business was done for futures at the prices named, though the largest packers have not yet named prices.

Dried Fruits.

Spot prunes are about unchanged. Some holders are firmer in their ideas than others, but the general market is about unchanged. Futures are as strong as ever, with indications that point to even higher prices. Peaches are scarce and still very high. A few are selling all the time, but the price is prohibitive. Spot raisins are about exhausted and are selling at very high prices. Choice seeded raisins have sold on spot as high as 11¾ cents. Futures are strong and unchanged, with no prospect of any recession in values. Apricots are high, scarce and dull. Currants are in good demand, speaking of futures, and the spot demand is seasonably small. Apples are firm and unchanged.

Eggs.

The recent hot weather has affected eggs in transit somewhat, and strictly fancy eggs are scarce in consequence. There has been no change in price, however. Fancy eggs are cleaning up better, while under grades need to be sold at sharp concessions. The production of eggs is at present very large, and until there is some falling off we will probably have no improvement in the market. There will probably be a falling off, however, within a week or so, and then a steady advance.

Butter.

The butter market is firm and unchanged. There has been a slight increase in the make and the quality is now running very fancy. The consumptive as well as the speculative demand is good and the receipts clean up every day on arrival. A continued increase in production can be looked for, with probably no material change in prices in the near future. Under grades are also firm and unchanged.

Cheese.

The cheese market is firm at the recent advance. There is a strong speculative demand and the receipts are being readily absorbed on arrival. Fine producing weather has ruled and the quality is very fine. Under grades are scarce and wanted at firm prices. No material change is looked for in the near future.

Provisions.

The consumptive demand for everything in the smoked meat line is good, and shows an increase. Prices remain unchanged and will probably rule on the same basis for some time. Dried beef, barrel pork and canned meats are all in better demand, but with no apparent prospect of any change in price. Pure and compound lard are both firm and unchanged and the market is very active.

Produce.

Old potatoes, 25 to 30 cents per bushel, demand fair; turnips, $1 per basket, demand fair; spinach, 75 cents to $1 per barrel, demand fair; cauliflower, 8 to 15 cents per head, demand fair; carrots, 2½

BACON
AS A BREAKFAST FOOD

There are dozens of breakfast foods on the market but none of them can take the place of Bacon; nothing is so thoroughly satisfying and nothing adds so much zest to one's life as a breakfast, the foundation of which is

Burk's "Butternut Bacon"

This Bacon is selected from corn-fed hogs, specially cured with granulated sugar, mild and of exquisite flavor and taste.

It is put up in narrow strips, strung with white cord, cut absolutely square, making any waste impossible; wrapped in highly glazed and parchment paper and embellished on two sides with an attractive blue and white label. A red seal is attached to the cord, stating the specific merits of this bacon, which is also known to the trade as the "Five B" Bacon, because of its name

Burk's Butternut Boneless Breakfast Bacon

This Bacon was first introduced at the National Export Exposition, held in Philadelphia in 1899. It has had a steadily increasing sale each year, and today is the best known and most used Bacon in Philadelphia.

Burk's Lard

Is guaranteed to be absolutely pure and to contain nothing but what results from the rendering of good, wholesome hog fat and to contain all its original properties, none of which has been extracted.

Many brands of Lard are "pure," but the rich oils have been extracted so that the manufacturers can make a larger profit.

Such Lard is not to be compared with Burk's, because it lacks richness, and while cheaper in price is in reality dearer because a larger quantity must be used to produce the result.

MARKET NOTES.

A few near-by cherries are in market, though the crop is lamentably short. The price ranges from 10 to 12 cents per pound, as against 3 cents and a glutted market last year. From present appearances there will be hardly any cherries in the East this year.

There is practically no corn in market as yet. All that has come has been from Florida and the receipts have been very light as yet.

Delaware raspberries are in market and command 10 to 12 cents per pint, against 5 to 6 cents a year ago. The crop will not be heavy.

The near-by crop of blackberries is expected to be heavy. As yet, however, the receipts from North Carolina are comparatively light. The price ranges from 10 to 12 cents and the quality is only fair.

North Carolina huckleberries range from 8 to 10 cents per quart, and the quality is very poor, much of the fruit being dried up. The demand is light.

All the strawberries in market are from near-by points. The quantity is large and the price 4 to 10 cents. The demand is good.

Florida watermelons are ranging from 15 to 30 cents each and are selling well.

Georgia peaches are beginning to come forward a little more plentifully and the average price is $3 per crate. The quality is very fair and demand excellent.

Florida cantaloupes are about done. Georgia is now shipping at a range of $2 to $2.50. California cantaloupes are also coming forward at a price of $5. The quality is very good and the demand active.

New Jersey cabbage is in market and averages 30 cents per basket. The crop looks large and the demand is good.

New potatoes have advanced $1 per barrel from the lowest point, and now range from $2.75 to $3.50 per barrel. The excellent demand is responsible.

Long Island peas, which are the best now on the market, command 60 cents per basket. Jerseys range from 25 to 50 cents per basket and are rather poor in quality.

Norfolk string beans average $2 per half-barrel. The quality is good and the demand active.

We Are Using More Norwegian Sardines.

The Norwegian fish-canning industry has had a wonderful growth in recent years. The export of canned fish has increased 100 per cent. during the last four years, and the sales to the United States have more than doubled in two years, amounting to $862,578, a gain of $122,969 over 1905. The largest item was sardines in oil, valued at $376,655, the next being salted mackerel, worth $307,716. The mackerel export to the United States fell off $68,388. There are twenty canning factories in operation, giving employment to 4,000 persons. The conserving of large quantities of fish and the increasing export of fish products has put new life into the fishing industry.

"Reciprocal Demurrage," by Geo. P. Thompson, first vice-president of the Southern Wholesale Grocers' Association, as the subject was one with which large shippers had had many unpleasant experiences. In part Mr. Thompson said:—

> The law of equity demands equal rights for all parties to a contract; reciprocity signifies a mutually interchangeable basis of agreement whereby the equivalent conceded is of a like obligation, the aggressiveness of either party depending on the advance or decline of the other.
> Briefly put, the theory advanced for your consideration is this:—
> If the railroads charge you demurrage for failing to remove your consignments within a certain specified time why should not the railroads be charged demurrage for failing to deliver those goods within a specified, reasonable time?
> It is a notorious fact that the railroads are lacking in facilities to handle the great tonnage of the country's increasing commerce.
> While they safeguard themselves by every little quibble in the exactions of rates and conditions, they neglect the most important factor of their being in existence as freight carriers, viz., the necessary equipment to transport the goods.

The Pure Food Committee, composed of Theodore F. Whitmarsh, W. T. Chandler, Fred. R. Drake and Frank H. Madden, presented a report which gave the status of the various State food laws in comparison with the Federal act. The report in part was as follows:—

> There have been legislative sessions in about three-fourths of the States, and we feel that we have succeeded in a great many instances in having laws enacted that will substantially conform to the national law. Delaware has passed a pure food law conforming to the national law. Maryland has no food law, but is expected to take action next winter. The States of Kansas, Missouri, Illinois and Indiana have either passed new food laws or revised those on their books so that they are practically identical with the national law. Nebraska has a new food law and as to adulteration and misbranding it is almost identical with the national law, but they have a net weight provision inserted in their act which may cause considerable trouble and annoyance to dealers. It is believed not to be constitutional or to be enforceable, for the reason that it discriminates. It omits canned goods from the net weight provision, and permits retail dealers to put up goods in packages and sell them without having the net weight shown on the package. Iowa has an effective food law. Its main provisions are identical with the national food law requirements, but they have, in addition, a requirement that in certain classes of foods the names of the ingredients and exact proportions thereof shall be shown.
> The Minnesota law varies somewhat from the national law, but in the main the commissioner announces that goods labeled in conformity with the national law will be permitted. Wyoming has a food law modeled on the lines of the national, but has a provision requiring percentages of ingredients.
> The commissioner, however, has announced that with very few exceptions, where he thinks the law is mandatory as to showing percentages, he will accept goods labeled in conformity with the national law. Montana has a new food law, which substantially conforms to the national law. The commissioner of Wisconsin has introduced many bills in the Wisconsin Legislature, for changes in their law, many of which are antagonistic to uniformity. A number of these have been abandoned by him after conference, but when the Legislature adjourns there will doubtless remain some provisions in the Wisconsin law that are not in conformity with the national law. The revised Illinois law is to all practical intents a copy of the national law.
> The Indiana law and its enforcement, your committee understands, will be substantially in uniformity with the national law. Both Colorado and Texas have enacted new food laws on substantially the lines of the national law. The recommendations of your committee for future action are as follows: First, that steps be immediately taken to secure a further extension of time from the Federal authorities for the use of such labels as are technically in violation of the law, but which are not fraudulent or do not misrepresent the quality of the goods, from October 1, 1907, to October 1, 1908. Second, that a strong committee be appointed by this association to use their best efforts to secure not only uniform legislation in all of the States, but uniform rulings by the commissioners of all of the States. Your committee considers this the most important work for your association at the present time. We would recommend that a liberal appropriation be made by this association for the use of this committee.

Later a resolution was adopted requesting the Secretary of Agriculture or the Board of Pure Food Administration to either grant or recommend to the three joint secretaries in charge of the operation of the pure food law an extension of the time in which old labels, which are only technically a violation of the law and do not misrepresent the contents of cans, may be used from October, 1907, to October, 1908.

Other addresses made on Thursday were: "The Need of a Better Understanding of Trade Conditions," by H. C. Beckett, of Hamilton, Ont.; "Free Deals and Bonuses," by Major Samuel Mahon, of Ottumwa, Iowa; "Co-operation," by O. B. MacGlasson, of Chicago; "Trade Discounts," by Fred. R. Drake, of Easton, Pa.

There are still no tomatoes from any point nearer than Mississippi. The average price is $1, which is an advance of 30 cents from the lowest point. The supply is moderate and the quality only fair. Florida tomatoes are becoming very scarce.

THE SCIENCE OF ADVERTISING

This Department is devoted to the criticism of advertising matter sent in, to the devising of new advertising ideas for special occasions, upon request, and to the suggesting of original advertisements when data is supplied. All communications sent in for this Department should be addressed to the Editor of Science of Advertising. They will be filed in their order and taken up according to strict rotation.

Mr. Clayton L. Morrow, grocer, of Turtle Creek, Pa., sends in a copy of a large circular for criticism in this department. It is printed on paper 10½ x 15 inches, of the poorest quality that has come into this department for a long time. I earnestly advise Mr. Morrow to insist that his printer do a little better on the grade of paper he uses, for nobody can have much respect for a piece of printing that looks like this. The size of this circular makes it rather expensive, and 50 cents a thousand more spent on the paper would have made it look like something. In my judgment, it has been pretty nearly spoiled by being printed on almost the cheapest grade of paper made.

CLAYTON L. MORROW,
Semmens Block, TURTLE CREEK, PA.

This has evidently been very carefully prepared, but the display is very bad. I believe in dividing a circular as large as this into panels; as a matter of fact, it wouldn't look like anything unless it was divided into panels, but the panels ought to have some uniformity about them. Far too many rules have been used in this circular. In some cases a paragraph has been divided on itself, as the cracker paragraph in the upper left-hand corner, thus confusing the reading and multiplying rules. This sheet should have been divided both ways in panels of somewhere near uniform size, and in these should be put the meat of the advertisement. The rest should be put into the introduction or cut out entirely. I note that several of the panels contain simply general statements about the store, such as those headed "Looked Through Our Store yet?", and "Ready." Matter of this sort is all right in moderation, but it should be gathered together and put in an introduction—never scattered through the text.

I should have made up this circular something like this:—

(HEADLINE AND INTRODUCTION)

(NAME AND ADDRESS)

The regular advertising matter should have been put in the twelve panels, each with its own heading, a few lines of text and a price. Don't crowd too much display type into the panels—that is one fault in the way the thing is set now. For instance, take the paragraph headed "Morrow's Hams," and contrast it with the clean-cut, easily read form in which I have had it reset below:

MORROW'S HAMS
Cured as no other hams are cured, by a process that gives tenderness and deliciousness of flavor. Rich, juicy and sweet.
12½ Cents Per Pound

Set all the panels after this fashion, and you'll have a very good-looking circular.

Don't Want Net Weight on Label.

That the wholesalers and manufacturers of Nebraska intend to contest the net weight clause of the new pure food law seems certain. In fact, Omaha jobbers have written State Chemist Redfern that they will not pay any attention to this portion of the law. The manufacturers with whom they deal refuse to put the net weight on their packages and they defy the Food Commissioner to make them do it. He has interpreted the law to mean that either the net weight or the net quantity, as in the case of liquids, must be given on the package or bottle. In this interpretation he has the support of Senators Aldrich and Root, who were on the Conference Committee at the time the law was adopted. Senator Patrick, however, believes that Redfern has adopted the wrong interpretation. He believes that the net weight of the package should be given, while the Commissioner is demanding the net weight of the contents.

In testing catsup the flavor is the important factor. The best flavor necessitates a good body and good color. All these good qualities are found in Snider's Catsup. It is sure to please you.

A Country Clerk Speaks Up.

Here's another one:—

Elkton, Md., June 22, 1907.

To "The Stroller."

Dear Sir:—I have just finished reading your dissertation on the incapability of the country grocery salesman to fill a city position. In behalf of others situated as myself, must beg to differ from you. Why? There are many stores situated in villages and towns who cater to a class of consumers who demand good groceries, and employed in them you will find salesmen who can tell you why the foreign sardine is preferable to the domestic, where olives are produced, the difference between virgin oil and other kinds; can also tell you what maraschino cherries, pate de foi gras, truffles, capers, etc., are, and why Taganrok wheat makes the best macaroni. These men are well-paid and their employers are loth to part with them. The environments of a clerk in a good country store is conducive to good salesmanship, if it is in him, if the salesman reads carefully a good trade paper such as the "Grocery World" and his employer trains him right. Some say that the salesman is born so. I differ; he is trained. He should be carefully trained by his employer to sell goods intelligently, to know where produced and how prepared; also to weigh and measure accurately, that thirty-six inches means a yard, not thirty-seven, and sixteen ounces a pound, not seventeen. When he has proper training, then when the emergency comes he is competent to meet it, and his employer will know that his business is in safe hands.

Now, friend "Stroller," I thank you for your indulgence and hope you will continue to be the grocery sage.

(Signed) "RURAL."

Everything this man says is true. Of course, there are country clerks who know the grocery business. Nobody doubts it; at least I don't. But I honestly believe that country clerks like this are in the minority. Even the very small minority. Very likely it isn't their fault, but because they haven't had any chance to do better.

I don't believe that the average clerk knows anywhere near as much about the business as the above letter indicates that the writer of it knows. By gravy, he talks like a cyclopedia, don't he?

As I am writing this, a certain country store comes to my mind. It's a typical country town grocery store, maybe a little larger than the average, but not much, if any, different otherwise.

This store employs four clerks, and I suppose they're fair types of the grocery clerk in the moderate sized country town. I know 'em all very well. Not one has had any city experience—they're just average country clerks. I'm going to size 'em up and just see how they stand. I can do that pretty well, I think, because I've known all about 'em for a good long time.

No. 1 is a fellow about 45 years old. I knew him when he was a boy. He's a good fellow, good church member, good husband, good father. Never been anything else but a grocery clerk and gets $14 a week.

This man knows the trade of his town like a book. He's a good hustler, does a little buying occasionally and looks after the stock. I should put him down as a pretty valuable man and worth all he gets.

And yet this clerk knows only the rudiments of the grocery business—the going after orders, the filling of them, the merest smattering of knowledge about the goods he sells. I'll bet a dollar to a cent he couldn't tell clearly the difference between condensed and evaporated milk.

Is he a country clerk who knows the business? I shouldn't say that he came within a mile of it.

No. 2 is a younger man about 30 years old. He's only been in the business a few years; before that he was a farmer. This one's a mighty bright fellow and a good business man. He's a great reader on all subjects, takes a trade paper in his own name and by all odds is the best-posted man of the four. Yes, I should say that if he doesn't know the grocery business well enough to hold a particular city job, he's in a fair way to soon, and very probably he does now.

No. 3 is a good-natured ass. A sort of an inoffensive fat-head. Good, willing fellow, eager to do anything he can, as long as he can, but no head. He can wrap up sugar and do any of the routine work about a grocery store as well as anybody, but know the business? No. He'll never know it—he couldn't learn it. He wouldn't be one-two-three in any job that amounted to anything.

No. 4's hard to size up, because he's been in the business only a short time, and he's young. Still, I knew his record before he took the job and it's safe to say he'll never buckle down enough to learn the grocery business. He's a sport and never did like anything that smelt of study. Because it takes as much study to really know the grocery business as it does to learn any other. I know a lot of people in the grocery business who have never done any studying to speak of, and that's exactly why they wear the ignoramus tag.

So that out of these four country grocery clerks, which, as I say, I believe to be fairly representative of the general run, only one, if I'm right, really has any decent knowledge of the business he's in, and could hold down a job in a big city grocery.

Because that's the standard I'm setting—enough knowledge to work in a store where business has to be made and held by the knowledge of the clerk.

I know hundreds of country grocery clerks that I'd lend money to any time if I had it (this ain't so durned rash as it sounds, because I never have it). They're good, bright fellows and hard workers. Yet, I don't consider that many of 'em know the grocery business according to my idea of knowing it, simply and solely because they've never had it put up to 'em to learn it.

To "The Stroller," Care "Grocery World."

Dear Sir:—Allow me to stand shoulder to shoulder with you in defense of that noble idea of yours. What man is so poor that he cannot eat the best corn if he can eat corn at all? Isn't it cheaper for a man to buy solid packed tomatoes at 15 cents than it is to buy a can of half-and half (one-half water and one-half skins) at 8 cents? Did you ever look around your children's plates after they had been eating Heinz's sweet pickles and find any leavings, any fag ends or rotten pickles? No, it's all good to eat. I am in a little farming town of 200 inhabitants and I sell the best California fruits, a good grade of olive oil, imported sardines, Heinz's goods and best Maine corn. I find good goods pay as good a profit as poor goods and are much better keepers.

If Brother Cox has got a man on his books that he does not want to sell good goods to for fear he will not pay for them he had better tell that man to pay cash or quit.

Now, Mr. Stroller, you may count on my vote every time and I would say to grocers, sell good goods and let the mail-order houses sell the trash. Let your motto be, "Selling better goods."

Very truly yours,
N. H. Breckenridge.

P. S.—I learned this idea from the "Grocery World" years ago, along with lots more good ideas.

The Stroller.

Question: * * *, Pa.—Some time in February, 1907, I bought through a wholesale grocery house a consignment of salt fish to be shipped direct from the lake. Upon reaching the station, freight prepaid, not having an agent, the following sizes were damaged: two 25-pound, one 20-pound, two 15-pound, one 10-pound. The bottom being out of the one bucket the staves were broken, so the pickle leaked out and the fish became unfit to offer for sale.

I made claim through their agent having charge of our station. The railroad hands, or conductor, marked some of these packages damaged on the waybill, but not the right ones, and not enough of them, so I refused to sign for the consignment of fish. The agent for the railroad then took up the matter with the railroad officials, but instead of them paying the claim I received from their agent this morning the following:—

Mr. —— — ——:—

I have at this office the correspondence concerning the fish for which you have presented claim. They claim that, according to correspondence, they will respectfully decline the claim, and am advised to inform you accordingly and to attach any reply that you may want to make. Please attach reply to this paper so that I may return with correspondence. Yours, —— — ——, Agent.

These fish were shipped via Buffalo, Rochester and Pittsburg, New York Central and Hartford Railroad and Central Railroad of Pennsylvania.

I want to know if I can bring suit before our justice of the peace, against what railroad, or the agent through whom the business is transacted for our station?

Answer.—From your statement of the case the railroad company would seem to be clearly responsible for the damage done here, since the goods were damaged in transit. I should therefore begin suit before your local justice of the peace and serve your writ upon the railroad's local agent. There is scarcely any doubt that your claim will be paid.

Arkansas.

The annual convention of the Retail Grocers' Association of Arkansas was held last week at Little Rock, and the following resolutions were adopted:—

Resolved, That this convention condemns the so-called semi-jobber who uses his position to compete with legitimate retailers through methods of unfair business competition, and recommends that its members bring all possible pressure to bear on manufacturers who sell concerns that buy as wholesalers and sell as retailers to refrain from selling goods to the offenders who masquerade as wholesalers.

That, whereas the recent session of the General Assembly enacted laws looking toward the advancement of this great State, and which will encourage capital and competition to come among us, and thereby help to drive out the demagogues and oppressive forces; and

Whereas, The retail merchant and the entire citizenship will be greatly benefited by these laws; therefore be it

Resolved, That it be the sense of this association that we, as individual members and as citizens, encourage in every way possible legitimate competition to come into this market and permanently locate.

Whereas, The present tax on oleomargarine has resulted in placing a premium on crime by encouraging unscrupulous parties in the larger cities to color the goods without paying the government tax, thereby causing the honest grocer to lose many sales of butter through the criminality of others; and

Whereas, The law as it is at present operates as a detriment to the farmer and not to his advantage, as was the original intention; therefore be it

Resolved, That this convention recommends that Congress repeal the present tax of 10 cents per pound on colored oleomargarine and pass other acts which will allow the legitimate grocer to handle such goods for what they actually are, thereby allowing the sale of an article of commerce which a certain class of consumers desire, at the same time placing such restrictions on its sale that the public cannot be deceived as it is under the present Federal law.

Resolved, That we recommend to all of the grocers of Arkansas that they follow closely the rule of weigh, count, measure and gauge everything they buy and that they report to their various associations such concerns who are found to be habitual violators of the rules of giving honest measures.

Adopted.

Resolved, That this convention urge its members to patronize independent corporations wherever they can do so, quality and price, of course, to be considered. We further commend the several independent corporations for what they have done in our behalf.

Spokane, Wash.

The Spokane (Wash.) Retail Grocers' Association have voted to not handle bread or other bakers' products because the Bakers' Association has raised the price of bread so high that there is no profit for the retailers. The bakers will not deliver bread direct to consumers.

New Orleans, La.

On behalf of the New Orleans Board of Trade and the New Orleans Wholesale Grocers' Association, John A. Smith has filed with the Louisiana Railroad Commission petitions for reduction in rates on less than carload lots.

The first petition asks for a reduction of from 30 to 20 cents per 100 pounds on less than carload lots upon sugar, rice and molasses from New Orleans to Shreveport, Alexandria and Monroe. This rate is wanted on the Texas and Pacific, St. Louis, Iron Mountain and Southern, Red River Valley and Southern Pacific Railroads.

For less than carload rates on commodities named the New Orleans Board of Trade wants the rate reduced from 55 cents per 100 pounds to a maximum of 40 cents per 100 pounds to stations on the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific, Louisiana and Arkansas, Houston and Shreveport, Southern Pacific, Texas and Pacific and Red River Valley.

The New Orleans Board also gives notice that a reduction will be wanted on coffee also from New Orleans to the various points in the territory involved, and they also ask for the mixing of sugar, rice, molasses and coffee in carload lots from New Orleans to the St. Louis, Iron Mountain and Southern, the same as is done from Alexandria and Shreveport.

California.

Every grocer in California will profit by the campaign instituted by the Associated Retail Grocers of San Francisco to guarantee honest treatment on the part of the commission houses handling butter.

They propose to accomplish two things:—

First. They propose to force the butter houses to deliver what they charge for and what the dealer pays for.

Second. They propose to wipe out the dishonest competition forced by the production of squares that are from one to four ounces short of the standard.

In the columns of their paper they will print each week a roll of honor, consisting of the butter houses who are prepared to promise to deliver fully what they

The Law —as to— Impure Soap

The Federal food and drug law applies to all medicinal preparations, whether for internal or external use. This includes soap, though every soap manufacturer but ourselves seems to prefer not to think so.

If a Federal inspector gets from you a sample of soap that proves to be adulterated or misbranded, you will be prosecuted unless you can show a manufacturer's guarantee.

If you handle Buchan's Toilet Soaps there will be no prosecution; but even if there is, it won't be against you, for we have filed our guarantee with the United States Government, and every cake of our goods bears the serial number.

Buchan's Toilet Soaps are not only safe; they are delightful soaps. The fact that they contain phenol absolut, 100 per cent. pure, gives them a quality that the average soap doesn't have at all.

charge for and to put out three sizes of squares and three sizes only, that is, 1-pound, 1½-pound and 2-pound squares.

The retail grocers, on the other hand, are prepared to help in this way:—

First. They will buy only from firms listed in the "Roll of Honor."

Second. If a grocer gets any short-weight goods, he will 'phone the office of the Associated Retail Grocers (West 3067). The office will at once take the matter up with the butter house.

If the butter house can show a good excuse and the other grocers are getting fair treatment, nothing will be done. If, however, repeated complaints are made against the same house and it is found that they are not trying to live up to the requirements of the grocers, their names will be removed from the roll of honor, and every grocer in the State will be notified that the firm in question could not be listed among the concerns that were willing to deliver what they charged for.

Fight Over Tabasco Sauce Label.

Alleging Trust methods and accused of making a false statement in an affidavit to secure a trademark for the word "tabasco," John A. McIlhenny was, during the week, sued for $30,000 damages by the New Iberia Extract and Tabasco Pepper Co. McIlhenny is at the head of E. McIlhenny's Sons, which claims to have a copyright on the word "tabasco." Both concerns operate on Avery Island, near New Iberia, La., where the world's supply of peppers is grown. The petition alleges that the McIlhennys have their agents send circular letters all over the United States and Canada threatening to prosecute any one selling "tabasco" sauce not manufactured and sold by the McIlhenny concern. The petitioners declare that when John A. McIlhenny, in February, 1905, made affidavit at Washington for the registration of the trade-mark "tabasco" he said that the word had been in exclusive use by his family since 1868, when the great-grandfather of John A. McIlhenny established the business. The complainants recite that dozens of manufacturers have used the word, and that the McIlhennys had a collection of bottles of rival concerns, which it labeled "Rogues' Gallery."

We would be pleased to have for publication in this column the ideas of our readers upon trade topics, it being understood that we do not hold ourselves responsible for any views expressed therein. All communications must be accompanied by the writer's name and address as an evidence of good faith, but not necessarily for publication. All inquiries within our power to answer will also be noticed in tbis department.

Editor "Grocery World."

Dear Sir:—Some merchants of Braddock, Pa., are agitating the formation of an association (grocers). They applied to me for something in the line of by-laws, and as I am not acquainted with what they really should have, and I want them to have the best, I referred them to you and they asked me to write you. Have you anything to offer? I will attend their next meeting and will try what I can to enlighten them by having them subscribe for the Only. Better send me a few sample copies.

The Coffee Department Again.

Carlisle, Pa., June 25, 1907.
Editor "Grocery World."

Dear Sir:—I was very much surprised at the brief reply you made to my letter of June 11th. You certainly remember that at one time you conducted a coffee department through the columns of the "Grocery World" and that you very suddenly discontinued same without giving your readers any explanation or reason for doing so. The writer's impression is that Mr. J. S. Elliott, of Newville, Pa., so completely outclassed your "expert's" judgment and knowledge of coffee that he at once withdrew from the race. I wish to refer to Mr. Elliott for a correct statement of his assertion at that time, and as he is now traveling on the coast and will not return for about four weeks, after which time I hope to write you again.

Yours truly,
P. W. WENK.

This letter, which is the second one on the same subject from Mr. Wenk, indicates that Mr. Elliott had some sort of a controversy with the "Grocery World's" coffee editor. Not a member of the "Grocery World's" staff has the slightest recollection of what this was, however.

Two Reports of the Baltimore Canned Goods Market.

No. 1.

Baltimore, Md., June 28, 1907.
Editor "Grocery World."

Dear Sir:—One whole week of warm seasonable weather, such as we should have had during the previous four or five weeks, is beginning already to show its influence over the market situation so far as future tomatoes are concerned. The upward movement has culminated, for the present at least, and the wise ones who have stated so positively that there will be no tomatoes packed in this market before the middle of September, and that a $1 market for futures is in sight, will have time to reconsider their rash statements. The successful tomato prophet is not yet on view. That rock has engraved upon it the names of many well known men who hit it and went down. It has been admitted all along that the acreage in tomatoes this season in Maryland, Virginia, Delaware and New Jersey is the largest ever planted. All sections report the season to be later than the average by two weeks or so, much of which can be recovered by favorable weather from now on. In recent years the canning of tomatoes has commenced in the latter part of July. Barring further unforeseen unfavorable crop conditions, new tomatoes should be ready for canning in August. Spot tomatoes continue firm and active at full prices, with no new developments in any direction. Both spot and future corn were again active this week. The rapid recovery in the market for spot corn proves that staple canned goods really possess intrinsic value after all. New string beans are now ready for quick shipment to fill emergency orders. The week's developments in new peas have been disappointing. Nearly every jobber wanted some peas of each grade to fill urgent demands and the Baltimore canners were obliged to pay exorbitant prices for the raw stock to fill those orders, hoping that each day would bring larger receipts and lower prices to enable them to average down their cost, but now fully half of the season for canning them has passed and no lower prices are in sight. It will be the keenest sort of disappointment if the coming week produces no relief for our pea packers, and in that case the jobbers who have bought peas elsewhere on pro rata or percentage contracts at low prices, instead of 100 per cent. guaranteed contracts, may expect to receive notices from the sellers that "very much to our regret we are unable to, etc., etc.," in the same old way, and then the markets elsewhere will conform their selling prices to the Baltimore quotations. Almost every article in the line of vegetables is fairly active and firm.

All fruits are strong and active, not a weak spot among them. Both red and white cherries and gooseberries are scarce and high. Strawberries are not scarce, but the weather has all along been so very favorable for shipping them long distances that the demand from out-of-town for fresh berries has enabled the shippers to outbid the canners, consequently extremely high prices have prevailed up to this date. Raspberries and blueberries are yet to come, but the latest reports about these two crops are unfavorable. Encouraging reports are received about the blackberry crop, due next month. Pears and apples may be short. It is still so uncertain about the peach crop that our canners refuse to make any prices on the coming pack. The demand for new pineapples is increasing at full prices. Cove oysters are getting scarce.

Yours truly,
THOS. J. MEEHAN & Co.

No. 2.

Baltimore, Md., June 28, 1907.
Editor "Grocery World."

Dear Sir:—The market on tomatoes still shows an upward tendency and the demand is keeping up unusually well. Orders are coming in from all sections. Naturally the disposition is not to load up on spot tomatoes at present prices, but there is evidently a good demand for them from the retail trade, and as long as this demand continues tomatoes will move out.

The weather conditions for the past week have been so good that the outlook for future tomatoes is better as far as the crop prospects are concerned. There is not very much business being done, though some sales have been made at 90 cents per dozen, f. o. b. county. Packers are not pushing the sale of futures, as most of them are pretty well sold up. We have had quite a large demand for No. 10 standards, but it has been a difficult matter to get a price on them. We hope to be able to quote some of these goods very shortly.

Corn.—No special change to report. The improved weather conditions ought to help the corn crop considerably, though the reports are not very encouraging. The season will be a very late one. As preparations were made for a very much reduced pack this year, it looks as though the pack will be a comparatively small one at best. It is almost impossible to get a price on future corn, and spot corn is not being freely offered.

It looks as though the pea packing season is now in full blast. Packers have so far had enough business to keep their stock of seconds and standards down to very small proportions.

We are having quite a big business on strawberries and packers are busy filling orders. Buying has been good enough to cause a number of packers to withdraw, and, generally speaking, the market closes this week in very much better shape than last week.

Yours truly,
THOS. G. CRANWELL & CO.

The Spice Market.

Baltimore, Md., June 26, 1907.
Editor "Grocery World."

Dear Sir:—The market continues fairly active, with better demand for spices in general. There are, however, no important features to advise of during the week.

Pepper.—Demand has been larger, prices have changed very little. There is some interest being shown in futures, and present low values should attract buyers.

Cayenne.—The market is steady and somewhat firmer. Bright chillies remain scarce.

Cloves are very steady and great scarcity prevails. There are little cloves in our country and not enough to meet the normal summer demand.

Pimento (Allspice).—This article is in good shape and will go higher. Jamaica growers are not offering new crop at this time, and spot supplies are confined to a few houses; their views, therefore, being very firm.

Mace is steady and in good demand; unchanged prices.

Nutmegs are exceedingly weak and, if anything, lower. Holders evidently want to realize on their stocks.

Gingers are very firm, with improved demand, Jamaica particularly being higher.

Seeds.—Caraway is firmer in Holland. Poppy remains high. Celery is moving upward, due to the approaching season.

Yours truly,
McCORMICK & Co.

Coffee Syndicate Backing Out of Market.

Manipulators of Rio and Santos Coffee Market Announce They Have Bought All They Can and Will Now Let the Market Take Its Own Course.

The remarkable statement that the syndicate conducting the coffee valorization plan for the Brazilian Government had bought all they had agreed to buy of the present tremendous crop and that now the market was to be allowed to take the course "dictated by the usual law of supply and demand" was put forth by their press agents during the last fortnight. Some wag on the Coffee Exchange at once started the report that the Brazilian Government had asked the growers to destroy the entire crop which they are now engaged in gathering. While this may sound ridiculous (and of course under no conditions will be done), there would be method in such madness, if the syndicate expected to carry out their plan successfully. Their press bureau is working overtime to induce a crop of suckers to come into the market, but unfortunately they lack the art to disguise their art. One of the principal financial and commercial sheets in the United States is handling the syndicate matter in such a manner that the most innocent lamb that ever walked into Wall street to be shorn could readily see that all this matter printed by these philanthropists was intended to induce the dear public to carry the burden of this ridiculous and insane attempt to defy the laws of nature and economics. Colonel Mulberry Sellers was a rank pessimist alongside of these rainbow chasers. Every dealer in coffee, either at retail or wholesale, should know the fact that for Exorbitant California Raisin Prices Gives Back Market to Ondara Valencias.

Ondara Valencia Raisins Can Be Shipped 3,500 Miles, Pay Two Cents Duty and Be Sold in a Small Way at Much Less Than California Loose Muscatels Cost in a Large Way.

The California raisin growers are again digging their own graves this year. So greedy are they to get their share of the high food prices, that they have named prices which will let in more of certain grades of foreign raisins than have come in for years.

A striking instance of this is the case of Ondara Valencia raisins, which were formerly imported into this country in enormous quantities. Prior to the advent of California raisins, Ondara Valencias came into Philadelphia alone to the extent of over half a million boxes a year. California raisins, however, encroached upon them, and while a few have always come in, the imports of the last few years have been only a fraction of what they formerly were.

This year these raisins can pay the 2-cent duty which will be imposed upon them and be sold at considerable less than California raisins will cost. For example, loose California muscatels on the present market will cost, delivered in the East, 8⅝ cents per pound in carload lots. Ondara Valencias can be shipped 3,500 miles, pay 2 cents per pound duty and be sold from wholesaler to retailer, in lots of 5 boxes, at 7½ cents! This fact has led to a large number of import orders, and several hundred thousand boxes will enter the country this year, simply because of the inordinately high prices of the California fruit. California raisins could have unquestionably had the greater part of this trade had the prices been reasonable.

Western Pennsylvania Merchants Will Gun After Dead Beats.

Adopt the New England System of Collecting, Which Has Been So Successful in Harrisburg.

Special correspondence of "Grocery World."

Allegheny, Pa., June 28, 1907.

I have now taken up the work of building up our organization, the Allied Retail Merchants' Association of Southwestern Pennsylvania. We have now opened an office in Room No. 3 of the Sterrit Building, Ohio and West Diamond streets, Allegheny, for the purpose of carrying out the proposition of protecting our members from dead beats and looking after their delinquent accounts and establishing a credit reporting system.

We have adopted the Union Mercantile Agency's (Bridgeport, Conn.) system to collect delinquent accounts, which I carefully studied and watched the operation of under the supervision of R. T. Cook, secretary of the Harrisburg Association. In six months' time they collected between $22,000 and $23,000 of delinquent accounts, one account being eleven years old and another nine years old, and placed on their card reporting system in the office of the secretary over 18,000 names.

We have just taken up the work of their system here this week and hope to be able to beat this wonderful record by at least 50,000 in the same time.

Secretary.

A Coffee Window.

I have been watching and reading your window display articles for some time, but so far failed to see an article on the display of roasted coffee.

I have been roasting and blending coffees for about twenty years, and have invariably noticed when going into a grocery store that most grocerymen keep their coffees in a bin behind the counter, instead of making a display of it. If they would stop long enough to figure their profits they would find there is more profit in coffee and tea than anything else in the store.

Why not show the coffee, then, and push it. The accompanying sketch will show how to do it, at no extra expense than to have the coffee and neat cards.

After filling the window full place in the centre and front of the pile against the glass a neat cardboard with the following neatly printed:—

> STOP in,
> LOOK at our coffees > and > LISTEN to what we have > to say about them.

On the side of the window, towards the entrance, display the price of the coffee and this sign:

> "BARGAIN DAY IS EVERY DAY AT THIS STORE."

If you want to make a drive on a certain grade of coffee, get a good blend, or, better still, make one yourself, give samples to your customers and let them report to you. If the goods give satisfaction keep it always the same. Try this display and let us know how it works.

P. S.—On receipt of a stamped envelope I will give any subscriber to the "Grocery World" the benefit of my long experience in blending coffees a formula for blending any priced coffee you wish to sell if you mention the price you wish to sell it at.

Mgr. Coffee Department of M. S. Miller & Co., Lancaster, Pa.

Notice to W. B. Hansel.

In the "Grocery World" of May 20, 1907, an article by W. B. Hansel, of Trenton, N. J., was published in this department. The "Grocery World" sent check for same to Trenton, but it has been returned by the post-office as undeliverable. Will Mr. Hansel kindly send his present address to this office?—ED.

Five Thousand Barrels of Chimneys.

R. E. Tongue & Bros., having just completed the new addition to their large storage plant at Allegheny avenue and Amber street, giving them a siding on Collins street, which makes their new address Allegheny avenue, Amber and Collins streets. This new addition gives them ample storage for at least five thousand more barrels of chimneys, which makes them better able to make prompt shipments, an established rule of the house, as well as take care of the large number of early fall orders they have booked. This firm has now the largest lamp chimney business in the United States, and were the first to eliminate charge for empty packages.

Their Lustre brand of lamp chimneys, which is made from the best of materials by union workmen, has won for itself a name and place in almost every up-to-date dealer's store.

What's the Difference?

The answer—"the bottom is as good as the top." You know what this means in Evaporated Apples. It means that your customers will keep buying that kind, and we know you will keep buying that kind to supply your customers. APELPI on a package of evaporated apples is a positive guarantee that the fruit is the finest that can be had, and its preparation can't be excelled.

"I Can't Get My Girl to Use It"

A remark made by a Philadelphia housewife the other day to a grocer who was recommending a certain soap powder to her.

Asked why, she said the stuff "was so hard on the hands," which means that it was loaded with harsh chemicals that though they ate off dirt, also ate off skin.

Young's Pearl Borax Soap Powder

contains absolutely nothing that will harm the skin or finest fabric. It will cleanse where anything can, and do it quickly and satisfactorily.

Ritter's Guaranty

In compliance with the rules and regulations for the enforcement of the Food and Drugs Act published by the Commission appointed for this purpose, we have filed a guaranty covering all our products with the Agricultural Department in Washington under the serial number 1017.

In the future all our products will be labeled in accordance with Regulation Nine as follows: Guaranteed under the Food and Drugs Act, June 30, 1906, No. 1017.

This guaranty is sufficient and covers every sale we make and no individual guaranties are necessary.

It has always been our aim to manufacture pure and wholesome food, to comply with existing laws and to protect all who buy our products, and we shall carry out this principle in the future.

We hope to deserve your continued confidence and patronage.

HERE IS YOUR QUESTION ANSWERED

Why put in Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa when you are selling five brands now? Well, because it is different from the rest, for one reason. It is the only cocoa packed in glass. It stands alone, and you know how novelty helps a thing to sell. The grocer who infuses a little novelty into his business is the grocer who succeeds.

Another thing, Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa is better than the rest. That isn't a bluff, honestly. We take out of our cocoa, in the making, a substance which other manufacturers allow in, greatly to the injury of the flavor of their goods.

Now do you know why you should sell it?

Will you mention the "Grocery World" when you write?

40 cents a pound

Packed in ½-lb. jars, 6 and 12-lb. boxes

Your Customers Will Ask for ATLAS Fruit Jars

Here is the jar everyone wants—the most perfect jar made. Better quality of glass than common jars—no thin spots, and extra strong at top, where common jars break.

ATLAS SPECIAL JARS

are extra wide mouth, which permits preserving whole fruit. Smooth at top and always seals perfectly. Last year we had thousands of inquiries and this year we expect more, because we shall continue to advertise largely in women's papers. We are also making with much wider mouth than other jars of this style. These we know will be in great demand, as sales up to this time have largely exceeded our anticipations. These are the popular styles of jars and your customers will want them.

E. Z. SEAL JARS

Why not carry what people ask for and get the benefit of our advertising?

No difficulty in getting these jars of your nearest jobber. We ship Atlas Mason and Atlas Mason Improved Jars in car lots and these special jars can easily be included.

Don't put cheap and unsatisfactory jars in stock—handle the Atlas.

If not with your jobber, write us before it's too late. We have done our part; now it's up to you and really "Its All in the Jar."

These Meats Are Pure!

All wise grocers now regard the guarantee of purity as the most important part of their meat deals.

Buy no meat or meat product without a guarantee if you value your trade and the health of your customers.

Our Vienna Sausages, Bolognas and Smoked Tongues are guaranteed absolutely to conform with all food and inspection laws of State and nation.

Nobody Else Will Do As Much

No matter what matches you buy, or who you buy them from, you can't do as well either for yourself or your trade as you can by buying and pushing the ones pictured here.

I pack 1,000 Our Darling Matches in every 5-cent box. I sell the retailer direct and save him the jobber's profit, so you make more money on my matches than anybody else does, and your customers get more matches for their money than anybody else gives them.

Another important point—no better match is manufactured than Our Darling.

JOHN T. HUNER, Evergreen, L. I.

I have made a study of Italian Macaroni, Olive Oil and Roman Cheese. I will be glad to give information about these goods to anybody who will get in touch with me.

The finest Macaroni that comes into this market is Francesco and Luigi Cirillo's, of Torre Annunziata, Italy. The best Olive Oil and Roman Cheese is F. Bertolli's, of Lucca, Italy.

I am headquarters for all three. If you want the real thing, write, or come and see me.

Can't Tell You Much Here

We can't begin to give you any adequate idea of the points of Hill's Refrigerators in this small space. Won't you send for our catalogue? We've prepared that rather carefully, and it tells the whole story.

Enough of the story to interest you is that Hill's Refrigerators are guaranteed to save 20 per cent. of your ice bills.

How to Get 100 Per Cent. Delivery

You never know when you buy future canned goods from your jobber, whether you will get all you bought or any, for that matter. If the jobber gets 100 per cent. delivery, you will get it, but not otherwise.

But you can always count on 100 per cent. if you buy Blue Bell and Clover Farm Tomatoes and Corn. We sell these to the jobber and guarantee him 100 per cent. delivery. He can therefore guarantee it to you, and will, if you buy these brands.

Blue Bell and Clover Farm Tomatoes and Corn are known by the trade generally to be the very best of their grade packed in Maryland.

Rae's Lucca Olive Oil

An Olive Oil of the purest quality—pressed only from perfect olives and carefully preserved from contact with anything that would hurt its exquisite flavor; beautiful to the eye and agreeable to the taste.
Do you keep it in stock?

The First Step Toward
A BIG BUSINESS

Instead of buying Coffee, Tea, Baking Powder, etc. in packages, which means building up a trade on somebody else's goods—buy in bulk and use this ideal carton—which we will label as you wish, and deliver ready to pack your goods in. This means "Boosting YOUR OWN business."

Read the Point In Large Type

Here's the proposition of James T. Shinn's Liquid Rennet in a nutshell :—

1. It is the cleanest rennet made.
2. It coagulates milk in 2 to 5 minutes.
3. It will not spoil.
4. Every bottle is guaranteed.
5. Jobbers everywhere indorse it.

And last, but not least—this is in large type because it's a large point—it pays 100 per cent. profit. Costs $1.50, sells for $3.00.

How to Answer Their Questions

Put a box of I-V Washing Tablets on your counter. They will be such a novelty that every woman who comes in will ask what they are and what they will do. Tell them this:—

1—They contain no acid of any sort.
2—They wash clothes without rubbing.
3—They make clothes beautifully white;
4—They can be used in hard water;
5—They take stains from table linen without any rubbing whatever.

Any one of these points would sell a package—just see the women's eyes glisten when you name them all.

HOW TO BE HAPPY Though a Grocer

Happy is the grocer who can get his advertising done for him without cost, and who can have a demand for worthy, profitable goods brought ready-made to his door!

That is exactly your condition, Mr. Grocer, if you sell Ralston Health Food and Purina Whole Wheat Flour. We spend thousands of dollars every month persuading consumers to go to you—with other grocers—for these products. And the steady increase in our sales shows that they are going.

Both these brands are superfine in quality and both pay you a handsome profit. Ralston Health Food is prepared from the hearts of selected wheat, and Purina Whole Wheat Flour is made from whole and very fine wheat. Both observe that scrupulously high quality and perfect purity which have made the name of Ralston Purina famous.

If 1000 Retailers in Philadelphia Recommended Us, Would YOU Believe in Us?

One of the hardest propositions which confront the retailer is to turn their bad debts into cash. Lots of them have tried different collection agencies, paid retaining or subscription fees and got no results; so it is hard to convince them that any one can help to bring the beats to book.

We show you how to collect your own accounts; nobody handles your money but you. We can give you the names of a thousand merchants in Philadelphia whom we have shown how to get money due them which had been charged off long before they heard of us.

It costs you nothing to find out what our plan is—can you afford not to?

Graft in the Retail Sale of Groceries

New York Trade Honeycombed with It. Regular Thing for Servants to Demand Rake-off from Grocers on Employer's Monthly Bill. Only One New York House with Courage Enough to Stand Out. Cases Where This House Lost Business Through Their Attitude.

The grocer who does business outside of the large cities has no conception of the extent to which graft enters into the buying and selling of groceries in the larger cities, particularly New York. By graft is meant that form of extortion which comprehends demands made upon grocers and meat dealers by servants of rich families and hotels for commissions upon the monthly bills. The New York trade is honeycombed with this sort of thing, and only one of the larger dealers, so far as the writer knows, has had the courage to refuse commissions to servants in any form. Many a New York dealer in meats, poultry, game, etc., regularly hands over part of his profits to chefs, butlers and housekeepers rather than run the risk of having his sales diminished. Some dealers even try to secure patronage on this basis.

Speaking again of New York, in some cases chefs and their associates have carried the game further than some grocers are willing to play it. Consequently tradesmen are showing a disposition to follow the lead of an uptown firm dealing in market supplies which for many years has enforced a hard and fast rule against giving commissions, no matter what the size of a customer's bill may be. This firm has instituted a system which not only prevents graft in the shop, but also acquaints employers with the grafting practices of their servants.

In opening a new account the grocer in question invariably sends the customer the following letter:—

> We believe you know that our method of transacting business does not permit of paying commissions to any servant in order to retain the custom of our patrons. This tends to prevent waste and dishonesty in the household of every customer we serve. Should you agree with us in this matter and care to express your approval we would esteem it a favor to hear from you.

This firm reports that hundreds of letters commending this stand have been received, but that in many cases the householder is so dependent on his servants that he has still been compelled to uphold their refusal to buy of the store giving no commissions.

The demands for commissions to servants on groceries purchased by employers are said to be of the most barefaced character. On one occasion the chef of a customer whose bill averages $800 a month the year around demanded of the grocery concern which gives no commissions a 10 per cent. commission, and went off vowing vengeance when they refused it. Another demanded $10 a month. A third said 5 per cent. commission had been paid him by every butcher his master had ever dealt with, and when he was turned down he tried to compromise on a handsome present at Christmas. One man said he would expect the dealer to send a joint of beef to his own house for his family's consumption once a week.

One of the best customers of this house stopped buying all of a sudden. As is their custom, they wrote a letter asking for his reasons and for any complaint he might have to make. The family was occupying just then a house at Tuxedo.

Back came a letter from the head of the house referring them to his housekeeper and giving her name. They wrote to the housekeeper in the same strain and got no reply. They hardly expected to get an answer when they found that the housekeeper's name was the same as that of a cook who a year or more ago asked for a 10 per cent. commission on purchases made for her employer and who went into a rage when refused and managed to get her employer to stop trading there.

During the interval the cook evidently had changed her occupation to that of a housekeeper, and finding that her employer was buying his meats and poultry at a place which would allow her no commission she put a stop to it. They wrote this to her employer and got a letter back asking advice.

He did not want to annoy his wife, who was an invalid; neither did he want tough meat served on his table and tough meat was the reason given by the housekeeper for asking him to buy elsewhere. He realized that probably the meats had purposely been spoiled in the cooking and that the chef and the housekeeper were in league, but he didn't want to discharge either and what could he do?

He could do nothing, under the circumstances, but continue to order from the new butcher. The tenderest meat and poultry wouldn't be first-class when it reached his table.

A hotel which this grocer had served faithfully for several years recently got a new chef who demanded a 10 per cent. commission, saying his predecessor told him that was allowed him. Within a week they had lost the custom of that hotel. When they wrote to the proprietor for an explanation he sent back word: "One of your steaks served to me was so tough I couldn't get my teeth through it."

The chef probably seared a fine steak and plunged it in a pail of cold water before broiling to a finish and then served it to the proprietor. Such a treatment would make the choicest of meat as tough as shoe leather.

Perhaps one of the most curious cases was in connection with a woman cook. Her mistress was one of the most fashionable women in New York and a lady every inch of her. This same grocer had been serving this patron satisfactorily for several years; therefore he was astonished to have her account closed without a word of explanation. Instead of writing he personally called to see her and was received with the greatest cordiality.

"I did not know until yesterday," she began apologetically, "what a mistake I had made, and I might never have found it out but for an old employee, in whom I place the greatest confidence."

This employee, it seems, had distrusted the new cook ever since her arrival three months before, about which time her mistress had begun to complain of the meat and poultry served on the table, and she noticed that the cook had a long call more than once from a butcher in the neighborhood. One day a spoiled chicken was served on the dinner table and that ended it. Orders were given not to buy another ounce of meat at the old place.

It was the trusted employee who got at the secret of the chicken. It had been sent by the rival butcher together with a $5 bill and the request to serve the chicken in place of a chicken from the usual place.

In a similar case a cook was asked to substitute two old fowls for two fine young roasting chickens, and she was promised a big commission if she diverted her employer's trade away.

Broom Trust Collapses.

The Union Broom Supply Co. has finally been buried. Notice has been filed in the Indiana Secretary of State's office of the voluntary dissolution of the Union Broom Supply Co., of Evansville. The Union Broom Supply Co. was incorporated with a capital stock of $40,000 in 1899 by G. S. Tarbox, Thomas Lyons, W. L. Roseboom, Oscar I. Merkle, A. J. Kline, F. F. Myer, William F. Lang, August Rosenberger, Geo. L. Mesker and Francis J. Reitz. Its members had been buying up as much of the broom corn crop of 1899 as possible, and when the company was incorporated it was reported to control from 75 to 90 per cent. of the broom corn raised that year. Broom corn in the Central District of Illinois was selling at about $60 in September, 1899, but under the stimulus of the buying by those who were about to form the Union Broom Supply Co. in the first weeks of October prices rapidly advanced from $65 to $90. By October 20th good crops were selling at $110, and some farmers were holding their corn for $120 to $150. In November the incorporation of the Union Broom Supply Co. was announced, and for a time it controlled the market. Not long after that competition came and the Trust's hold weakened.

Summer Resort Business Picking Up. Cause of High Food Prices. Small Items of New York Trade News.

Special correspondence of "Grocery World."

New York, July 5, 1907.

Jobbers and retailers who have a summer resort business quite generally say that they are now making up for some of the trade lost or delayed by the backward season. Several prominent members of the West Side wholesale grocery district say that in a number of respects trade is much more satisfactory than it had been. They said that the buying just before the holiday was in as heavy a volume as they have ever known for this period. While these men say that at no time was there anything to worry about in trade conditions, yet now there is improvement, due perhaps to crop conditions as well as to other causes.

Two pages were devoted Monday by a commercial paper to the wholesale grocery houses of New York, with illustrations of the buildings of principal jobbers and manufacturers and some sketches of careers. The article made emphatic the point to which attention has been called before—the growing importance of the manufacturing side of the business of leading jobbers.

The companies to which most attention was paid were F. H. Leggett & Co., Austin, Nichols & Co., R. C. Williams & Co., E. C. Hazard & Co., Seeman Bros., Koenig & Schuster, William A. Burton & Co.

It was said that the volume of business of the jobbers in a year is not less than $100,000,000, and that 125,000 retailers buy from these houses. Another assertion was that there are individual houses which have a gross business in a year of $30,000,000, but it is evident that if $100,000,000 is a correct estimate for all of the houses not many can separately have a business equal to the former amount.

Two views are expressed as to the high level of prices, with the possibilities of scarcity of supplies in some lines. One class of observers suggest that there must be a limit to the prices which the consuming public can pay and that this limit has been reached, as a result of which natural causes will bring about something of a decline. The contrary opinion is that production has not yet caught up with the increased consumption due to the higher standard of living and to the steady increase in population. Those who think this predict that the high level of prices will be maintained until production catches up with consumption.

The T. A. Snider Preserve Co. last Saturday caused the arrest of a salesman, accused of forging orders in order to get commissions on sales. The complaint was made by the company's manager, J. T. Austin. It is said that because of the possibility of getting forged orders, this and other companies have adopted regulations that are sometimes inconvenient for the honest salesmen. Mr. Austin has said that for this reason and to make a lesson of the salesman now accused, he proposes to prosecute the case with the utmost vigor.

A plea of not guilty was entered Monday in the United States Circuit Court by the Great Northern Railway Co., accused of rebating on sugar and coffee. This was one of the railroads indicted last winter. It put in a demurrer which was overruled, and it now pleads not guilty and will await trial in October. Some of the other companies have pleaded guilty and paid fines.

What the "Scott" Label Means

PURITY
STRENGTH

We have become interested in Ceylon Tea, whose supremacy is fully acknowledged by everyone who knows the subject. We believe in these teas so thoroughly that from now on we will make a specialty of them.

We will put up under our own label Ceylon Teas, both black and green (uncolored), in their purest state and in their highest grade.

The fact that they will be under the "Scott" label sufficiently assures that the teas will be of the finest flavor, having both delicacy and strength.

Within the last few years much effort has been expended in educating the tea dealer and the tea user to the use of high-grade Ceylon Teas. This rapidly-increasing class will find something to exactly suit them in our brands.

We want to impress upon the trade the fact that once a customer tries Ceylon Teas no other will suit.

L. J. Callanan, 41 Vesey street, has won all kinds of honors of late with his yacht "Eclipse" in the regattas held in the waters hereabouts. Mr. Callanan is trying hard to visit his grocery once or twice a week for a few hours each time, but the maritime demands upon his time press him closely. However, as it is only in the yachting season that he allows himself to wander very far from Vesey street in business hours, he may well be said to have earned his vacation.

"As Good As I Bought Last Time"

You ought to sell Swift's PREMIUM Hams for your own protection. Can you satisfy your trade unless your hams are uniform? And can they be uniform unless bought from a packer who can keep his raw material uniform?

Few packers have our facilities for keeping hams up to a given standard year after year. Swift's PREMIUM Hams scarcely vary a hair's breadth from one year's end to another. That does us a whole lot of good, as it will do you.

The woman who can always depend on getting good ham—"as good as I bought last time"—is going to buy lots of ham.

Says Free Soap Deals Kill Profits

Western Jobber Believes They Have Greatly Demoralized Trade. Still All Efforts Fail to Induce Manufacturers to Stop Them. Believes Soap Manufacturers Should Be Compelled to Choose Between Jobbers and Retailers as Distributing Mediums.

The subject of "soaps and free deals" opens up a wide range for discussion and embodies principles applying to general business as well as particularly to soaps. The older men in the grocery business will remember when there were not only no free deals, but no drop shipments on soaps or other commodities handled by the wholesale grocer. The drop-shipment scheme was devised to equalize trade conditions among the various jobbing centres, with the idea of securing a profit to the jobber, regardless of his geographical position toward the place where the business was solicited.

Instead of securing a profit on selling lists promulgated by the various manufacturers, experience has shown that the attempt has been an entire failure and we are confronted with the fact that today only an insignificant fraction of the soap business of the country is paying the jobber any profit commensurate with the cost of doing business. This condition is, in my opinion, caused by the indiscriminate competition which the drop-shipment practice permits.

Further evolution in business methods produced the so-called free deal. This, like the drop-shipment scheme, is an expedient in business of more than doubtful commercial morality. The free deal is resorted to by the soap manufacturer to cut the price of his product in one section, where he conceives that he has a rival to punish or a weak competitor to destroy. The logic of the practice is that the jobber and consumer in one section of the country, by paying full prices, are compelled to pay the expense of the war carried on in another section to destroy the very competition that would give them cheaper products. It is this very practice that is condemned at the bar of public opinion in a great industrial corporation of the country, and which has resulted in numerous suits against it by the Government. The principle is identical in both cases and if the Government has grounds for attacking the one for this practice it seems to me it has the same grounds for attacking the other.

The committee appointed by the National Wholesale Grocers' Association on the soap question last October has met a stubborn resistance on the part of the soap manufacturers to the elimination of the free deals. Arguments, based solely on the proposition stated above, failed in convincing a single manufacturer of the justice and propriety of abandoning free deals.

The next great question connected with the distribution of soap is that of the position of the manufacturer in the distribution of his product. I take it to be a maxim in business that no jobber or middleman can distribute products to the same patrons in competition with the manufacturer of such product. This is a self-evident proposition. The tendency of buyers to get as near the source of production as possible gives the manufacturer a moral advantage even at identical prices. What position does the jobber or middleman occupy between the manufacturer and the retailer? The jobber's locality and equipment enable him to accomplish a more economical distribution of manufactured products than can possibly be accomplished from only one centre of a large manufacturing plant. But it is only possible for the jobber or middleman to distribute the product of manufacturers who chosse him as the channel for the distribution of their product. It is suicidal for the jobber to attempt to handle the product of any manufacturer who retains the right to go past him to the retail trade, and thus secure the gilt-edge business of the retail trade, leaving the jobber the moiety, to whom the manufacturer refuses to extend credit.

To my mind the time has arrived when the jobbing grocers must demand of the manufacturer to elect whether he will distribute his product through the jobbing grocer, or go direct to the retail trade; there is no middle ground. I believe that this convention should address itself to this question, which so vitally interests and, in fact, affects the very existence of the business of its membership. We have two instances of the successful operation of this plan. The Southern Association has adopted it in the handling of soaps, and the Iowa-Nebraska Association for the past ten years has carried out this plan in a number of lines. It only requires fidelity and honesty on the part of the individual membership of the National Association to make it an instant success.

In the distribution of manufactured products we encounter the ubiquitous specialty man employed and paid by the manufacturers to maintain and push his product, turning, of course, all orders through the jobber chosen by the retailer.

Chinese Still Remember Our Meat Scandal.

Meat products now used in China are now supplied by English firms, as the Chinese people have discontinued the use of American canned goods since the "packing house scandals" were published. At present nothing is being done by American firms, and this trade will remain closed to America until a determined effort is made to regain it. The American Consuls advise the sending of competent men to investigate the field and to remain there long enough to overcome the prejudice against American canned goods, which cannot be done within a brief period, but only by slow and steady work. Such a man should be familiar with the American packing house industry and products, and one who understands the Chinese character and is willing to do hard work against great odds.

Jersey strawberries are about done. The price runs 5 to 9 cents and the quality is poor. Better berries are coming from Pennsylvania and New York State and are ranging from 15 to 20 cents.

Burned Thousands of Mail Order Catalogues

Western Retailers' Association Behind Scheme Which Leads Big Chicago Mail Order House to Issue Threatening Letter. No Longer Sends Dollar Catalogue Free.

The warfare waged by retail merchants' associations against the mail-order houses of Chicago seems to be drawing some blood, judging by a letter which Montgomery Ward & Co., the Chicago mail-order people, are now sending everybody who writes for their enormous catalogue, which is supposed to cost $1 per copy.

The plan of warfare which has moved the mail-order house to draft the letter in question is one which the "Grocery World" condemned several months ago. It comprehends sending for mail-order catalogues and destroying them, this being depended on to harm the concern financially. Certain associations of Western retailers, aided by some lumbermen's associations—where the lumbermen come in isn't clear—took the idea up, and have for several weeks been working it systematically. It is said that through bogus inquiries Montgomery Ward & Co. have sent out thousands of copies of their catalogue, every one of which was burned unopened.

So that now every person who writes for a Montgomery Ward catalogue first receives the following letter:—

Dear Sir:—We have your request for catalogue and under ordinary circumstanees would be very glad to forward a copy at once, but just now a word.

As a result of the most extraordinary plot ever hatched by a presumably reputable business men we eonsider it advisable to deviate from our usual poliey.

Please read the attached newspaper clipping. Read it from beginning to end and stiek to it until you understand the real significance of the plan. Then if you don't get hot you are not the honest person we hope you are.

With fifty million independent eitizens in this eountry, entitled by every right of law, custom and common sense to be their own masters, this conspiraey, sanctioned by the Lumbermen's Assoeiation and indorsed by retailers' associations, becomes one of the surprising blunders of the day.

Our mails are heavy with indignant protests from self-respeeting citizens rebellious at this blow at their privileges.

Now we haven't the slightest doubt that the lumbermen as a whole are honest and honorable gentlemen who will never sanetion anything off color. It is evident that a few foolish misguided persons are responsible for the ridiculous position of the Lumbermen's Association as a whole. The same may be said of merchants in general. As a rule they are honest, reputable men. The percentage of black sheep in their association is the same as in any other body of business men, so we are not at all worried about the plan to steal our property and destroy it. Only a small number of misguided merchants will heed the ill adviee.

An examination of our mail shows that the conspiracy is to a certain extent working. We don't know how far this eonspiracy will go. We do know, however, that we are perfectly able to proteet our interests, and until this agitation blows over, whieh will be as soon as the better class of merchants come to their senses and realize the criminal features of their plan, we are going to put catalogue applicants to the test of honor.

If you are a former or prospective customer, desiring our catalogue for business purposes, we want you to have our catalogue, but as the conditions require some evidenee of good faith, we are going to ask you to send us 25 eents as a positive proof that you are not a conspirator and a violator of the United States laws. Then as a proof that we are trying to play fair with you, we agree to give you credit for double the amount (50 eents) on your first order for $5 worth of goods or over. In other words, send us 25 eents with your application for a eatalogue, and we will give you a credit slip good for 50 cents on your first order of $5 or over. The 25 cents we ask does not begin to pay the eost of the eatalogue nor the postage, but it is evidenee that you mean business and are aeting in good faith.

The eonspiraey of the dealers is a slap at your intelligence. Join us in showing them that highway methods no longer go in business. Your money is your own. It's as good as anybody's else. It goes further at Ward's than most places and that's what is eausing the trouble.

What do you think about the dealers' plot? Won't you be good enough to write us a letter and give us your ideas? We already have thousands of them, but the more the merrier. Our customers are our best friends and the way they have rallied to our defense in this lumbermen case is very gratifying indeed.

If you are reputable and mean business we shall like very mueh for you to have our catalogue. If not, no further correspondenee is neeessary.

Respectfully,

MONTGOMERY WARD & Co.

P. S. 1.—Put 25 cents in the eoin holder we inclose. The 25 eents proves that you mean business and are not a law-breaking conspirator. Remember you get it back full measure—50 eents.

P. S. 2.—Don't forget to tell us what you think of a set of men who fight competition by illegal means. A few lines will be appreeiated.

P. S. 3.—We have sorted out and are carefully guarding a big bateh of fraudulent catalogue applieations that may perhaps be used later to forward some of the conspirators into jail.

The remark which is on the "Grocery World's" mind is that although the very much smaller city of Easton, Pa., is represented in this list, the Philadelphia wholesale grocery trade is not represented at all.

Can an organization be truly "national" which takes no heed of one of the four largest markets in the whole country?

Mean Criminals.

The "Grocery World" has not the smallest use for the big Chicago mail-order houses, which through deceptive catalogues worm their way into every town and city in the United States, luring away the legitimate dealer's trade with their false cry of "wholesale prices."

Nevertheless, we declare deliberately that he who sends for a mail-order catalogue with the intent to burn it, and who when he receives it does burn it, is no better than the incendiary who burns his neighbor's house, or the thief who steals his watch. In fact, he is both thief and incendiary, for he has literally stolen and destroyed another's property.

Thousands of persons have done this in the West, all with the justification that "all's fair in war." These workers in what they consider the retailers' cause are wrong—they have not only made peculiarly mean criminals of themselves, but they have immeasurably hurt instead of helped the retailers' cause!

The Unspeakable Pie Filler.

The Department of Agriculture's recent pronunciamento that "pie fillers" were to be carefully examined attracts attention to the extent to which another cherished American institution has departed from its original conception.

In the beginnings of our national history no morsel more completely satisfied our forefathers' palates than pie. From it they absorbed the inspiration to do great deeds, for in the old days pie was pie.

To-day the pie of commerce is a bastard product. Only the crust remains. The filler, no longer straight fruit, spiced or seasoned, is "pie filler," a hopelessly disappointing mess composed mostly of glucose. Pie filler is surely a good name for it—it does fill the pie and also fills the eater, but not with delight.

For once Dr. Wiley is on the right track. Fight the pie filler to the death, Doctor!

More Gimbellsms.

At the end of a half-page advertising screed heavy with bouquets for their grocery and wine departments, Gimbel Bros., the Philadelphia department storekeepers, speak as follows:—

> In anything said or done at Gimbels there is absolute avoidance of anything approaching censure of other businesses.

This is a lie. Repeatedly the Gimbels have stated in words that could only be interpreted one way, that their's was the only good grocery store in Philadelphia, and that before they came there was no good store.

Another thing they say in the same advertisement is this:—

> And we ask no credit or bouquets. We simply do not think it fair to substitute—and we won't do it.

You do substitute. You substitute sophistry for truth whenever you write an advertisement.

A Man's Right to His Customers.

A Western trade paper syndicate which makes a business of supplying matter to trade journals for a consideration sends the "Grocery World" an item which we have bought with the intention of hanging upon it an inquiry regarding the ethics of one phase of the hunt for business. Here is the item:—

> In the course of a conversation with a traveling man the other day he said: "Whenever I go into a town and find a man there who has been a customer of one of our competitors for years, I at once lay plans to land him as a customer of my house, because I know he is a good customer for any house. He will, in nearly every instance, tell me that there is no use talking to him, as he has been buying all his goods of that particular house and has no reason for changing. I generally tell him that he is exactly the kind of a customer I want, for, if I can show him it is to his advantage to give me his business, instead of to the customary house, he will then be as loyal to my house as he now is to a competitor.
> "I may not get my man for a year or so, but I eventually get him, and when I do, I know he will be with us for years, and we will get all his business, either by mail or when I go to his town, for he is a sticker."

> Too many good business men are overlooking this point to-day. This traveler strikes right at the centre of big business building when he goes after the customer who is an old customer of a good competitor, for his trade is well worth much effort to land; while the dealer who is easily persuaded to give you an order on short acquaintance is just as easily persuaded to give the next man an order, and as a result you never feel that you can depend upon his regular business.
> This idea should be just as valuable to the retailer as to the manufacturer or jobber, for the retailer will also find that the "sticker" is a good customer.

In other words, the gospel preached by this writer is: "Seek out your competitor's best customers and use every honest means you can to get them for yourself."

The query is—is this decent, is it fair, is it right? Has a man who has attracted customers to himself any vested right in them? Must he wage each day a fight to hold them? Is he never to consider them his own? Can a man never expect from his competitors that form of honorable treatment which refuses to deliberately go after his trade? In the professions, notably law and medicine, it is considered an ethical crime to move a hair's breadth after another's clients or patients. Is there any reason why this fine feeling should not equally obtain in the grocery business?

This is a vitally interesting question. Is everything not actually dishonest to be considered fair in competition?

The Millbourne Collapse.

The lamentable collapse of the Millbourne Mills Co., of Philadelphia, shows that age does not always give impregnability. Since about 1750 the Millbourne Co. has been a notable local enterprise. The very day before its failure it would have been pronounced by those not on the inside to be at the very zenith of its prosperity. Yet at that very moment it was actually only an empty shell.

There is apparently no reason other than bad management to which to ascribe this remarkable failure. It is known that last spring in order to raise a large sum quickly the concern sold over 40,000 barrels of flour short, so to speak. Shortly after that the wheat market advanced, and before they could escape the Millbourne people were choked to Retailers Condemn Pennsylvania Governor.

Adopt Strong Resolutions of Protest Against Him for Vetoing the Garnishment Bill. Various Associations Elect Convention Delegates.

Special correspondence of "Grocery World."

Erie, Pa., July 5, 1907.

All over the State retail merchants' associations are adopting the following resolutions of condemnation against Governor Stuart for vetoing the garnishment bill passed by the last Legislature after strenuous work. The resolutions are being forwarded to the Governor as fast as adopted:—

RESOLUTIONS OF PROTEST.

Whereas, Hon. Edwin S. Stuart, Governor of Pennsylvania, vetoed the Irwin Garnishee Bill, House Bill No. 480, on June 11th, 1907, and later declined to reconsider his action, therefore a special meeting of the Erie Business Men's Exchange was held in their rooms June 24, 1907, when it was unanimously agreed that the action of the Governor be condemned and that the Executive Council of the Exchange, representing nearly 500 business and professional firms of the city of Erie, be directed to communicate the following resolutions:—

Resolved, That the statement of the Governor, "It has long been the policy of this Commonwealth to secure to the laborer by profession and occupation the fruits of his own work for the sustenance of himself and family," is inconsistent for the reason that there exists among the statutes of Pennsylvania a law for the protection of hotels and boarding-house keepers which permits the attachment of all of a debtor's wages to satisfy claims to the extent of four weeks' board with imprisonment where delinquent attempts to leave the locality, while the conservative measure desired by the Retail Merchants' Association of Pennsylvania permitted but one attachment of 10 per cent. of the debtor's earnings for necessaries in thirty days, after thirty days' notice to the delinquent of intended garnishee.

Resolved, That the alleged "difficulties in determining what are necessaries" indicate either intentional deception, hurried consideration or gross ignorance, because the courts of eight or ten States have passed upon the subject of necessaries repeatedly, and have laid down a well-defined method of reasoning which admits of but little difficulty in reaching a decision.

Resolved, That the statement, "This bill places a premium upon incurring indebtedness in excess of $25" is not a fact. If merchants were unable to garnishee claims in excess of $25 the limitation would be an inducement to the retailer not to extend credit for large amounts.

Resolved, We must regretfully conclude that the Governor has been influenced to his hurried decision by railway and labor interests known to have opposed the measure in the House and Senate.

Resolved, That we will support a 10 per cent. garnishment law at the next session of the Legislature, and we request the Governor in the interval to investigate the garnishee laws of Ohio, New York, Delaware and Missouri, believing that after careful investigation he will acknowledge his error and agree with us that a reasonable garnishment law is a business necessity and not to the detriment of any honest wage-earner.

One More "New" Thing Proved Old

The "New" French Process of Using Burning Sulphur to Preserve Meats, Etc., Proves to Have Been Known Twenty-five Years Ago. Father of a "Grocery World" Subscriber Bought "Secret" Over Quarter Century Ago.

The "Grocery World" herewith presents another piece of evidence that there is nothing new under the sun. Read the following letter:—

Easton, Pa., June 28, 1907.
Editor "Grocery World."

Dear Sir:—I see in your "Grocery World" of June 17th, page 28, an article, "New Clever Scheme of Preserving Food." Do not let anything like this go abroad. Inclosed find a receipt which my father bought from a man, at least twenty-five years ago, from Philadelphia.

And yet they say Philadelphia is slow! Yours,

ED. E. NAGLE,
Of W. H. Nagle's Sons, Grocers.

Here are two photographs which show that Mr. Nagle has hopelessly punctured another "new" thing. The first photograph shows the "Grocery World's" article of June 17th, and the other the receipt which Mr. Nagle's father bought over a quarter of a century ago:

The distinguished French chemist's discovery, therefore, turns out to be a lemon, so to speak.

The "Grocery World" feels sure that the readers of the "Grocery World" would be immensely interested in hearing what luck Mr. Nagle, Sr., had with the sulphur scheme. Will Mr. Nagle, Jr., oblige?

New Clever Scheme of Preserving Food.

French Chemist Finds That Sulphur Burned in a Tight Box Will Impregnate Meat So That It Will Not Decay. Apparently Within the Law.

Special correspondence of "Grocery World."
Washington, D. C.,
June 14, 1907.

In view of the widespread agitation regarding the use of preservatives in food, some information filed at the State Department during the past week will be of great interest. The information comes from Consul-General Richard Guenther, who writes from Frankfort, Germany, to report a new plan just devised by a French chemist to preserve food products, particularly meat. The chemist whose work the plan is is notable and commands respect.

Under the new plan meat to be preserved, for example, is hung up in a tight box, and then a few sulphur threads are placed in it and ignited, after which the box is closed. The meat will be preserved for a longer time than is necessary in housekeeping, and its taste is not at all affected. If it is intended to preserve meat for several months, it should be treated with sulphur fumes as soon as possible after the slaughter; the meat should not contain any sawed bones, as decomposition proceeds from them; the boxes in which the meat is kept ought to be airtight and be filled for from twenty-four to forty-eight hours with carbonic acid.

By analyses the chemist proves that meat which in this manner has been preserved for three months contained no free sulphuric acid, and after being boiled contained only three to four ounces of sulphuric acid salts in 220 pounds, a perfectly harmless quantity.

Will Our Meat Markets Come to Horse and Dog Meat?

Horse Meat Freely Advertised for Sale in German Newspapers. Dog Meat Also Eaten. Advances in Imported Food Stuffs in the Last Ten Years. A Nearly Seedless Tomato.

Special correspondence of "Grocery World."
Washington, D. C.,
July 5, 1907.

Horse flesh is very generally advertised in the German newspapers, especially in those of the large industrial centres, and most German cities have at least one market which makes it a specialty, claiming for it a higher percentage of nourishment than that of either beef, veal, mutton or pork. Neither is it unusual to find advertisements of dog meat or for the purchase of dogs for slaughter. Nor is it possible to read the German newspapers for any length of time without coming to the conclusion that a great many dogs are killed and eaten that do not give up their lives under official inspection. News items detailing the arrest, trial, conviction and punishment by fine or imprisonment of men charged with killing and eating dogs that belonged to others, sometimes valuable animals or cherished household pets, are not infrequent. Quite recently such an item told how the police at Cassel, a city of Hesse-Nassau, while searching for a lost dog, for whose recovery a reward was offered, located a private dog slaughterhouse and arrested four men who were apparently making a regular business of stealing and killing dogs. Several live dogs, several freshly slaughtered carcasses, and evidences of the slaughter of dozens of other dogs were found on the premises.

Swiss cheese sales in the United States continue to expand. The value in 1887 was $691,330; the million-dollar mark was passed in 1902; the shipments for 1905 were worth $1,437,808, while in 1906 the aggregate was $1,833,588. Dyestuffs were exported to America in 1887 to the amount of $146,154, in 1895 to $384,677, and last year to $798,009.

In foodstuffs imported recently the more important articles show in some cases a decline and in others but a slight advance. The importation of food includes a much smaller number of articles than the imports for manufacturing, the principal articles imported for food purposes being, in the order of their value, sugar, coffee, tea, cacao, fruits, wines, liquors, spices, etc. Taking the average price for the ten months ending with April, 1907, and comparing with that for the corresponding period of 1897, sugar shows an advance of slightly less than 1 per cent., coffee shows a decline of over 29 per cent., tea an advance of 100 per cent., cacao an advance of 48 per cent., distilled spirits an advance of 15 per cent., and champagne and other sparkling wines an advance of 2 per cent. While the figures above quoted show merely the percentge of advance or decline in each case, the actual advance or falling off in price per unit of quantity is equally interesting. Comparing the figures for the ten months of 1907 with those of the same months of 1897, tea shows an advance from a little over 12 cents per pound in 1897 to a fraction above 24 cents in 1907; cacao, from 9½ cents per pound in 1897 to 14 cents in 1907, while sugar is in each case valued at practically 2 cents per pound, the advance being slightly less than 1 per cent., and coffee shows a fall from 11 cents per pound in 1897 to 8 cents in 1907. Thus coffee and sugar, which form by far the largest items in the importation of foodstuffs, show in one case a decline and in the other no advance, while tea and cacao, of which the value of the imports is less than one-fourth that of coffee and sugar, show an advance.

Process Meats, Poultry, Eggs and Fish dry without water and keep in a dry place. Process the empty barrel, then put in the sweet cider and cork up the barrel. In using fruit or vegetable, prepare as usual.

As is well known, each fruit of the ordinary tomato contains hundreds of seeds, while the form which Professor Halsted has developed seldom contains more than fifty seeds and frequently there are not more than five or six and often none. This variety has become pretty well established now and has been called the Giant because of the very large size that the plant attains.

Some Pure Food Revelations in North Carolina

[The following matter concerning the investigations of the North Carolina Dairy and Food Department into the purity of the food products sold in that State, together with some other data, which will appear in future issues, has been sent to the "Grocery World" by the Dairy and Food Commissioner of the State named.]

Fraud is practiced by selling one vinegar for another, or by adding a cheaper variety to a more expensive or desirable one, and selling it as the more desirable article. The great demand for apple cider vinegar causes the manufacturers of other vinegars to label their products "Apple Vinegar," "Cider Vinegar," "Fruit Vinegar," or "Family Vinegar," which is a fraud to the consumer and an unjust competition to the fruit industry.

Number of samples not found as represented	7

More than 46 per cent. of the official samples examined were not as branded or represented. It is not known what claim was made for the samples sent to the department by dealers for analysis.

Five of the official samples were sold under brand names as "Monogram" and "Blue Grass Belle," etc. One sample of the "Monogram" was represented by the dealer to be an apple cider vinegar, claiming that it had been sold to him for that product. The branding on the barrel was indistinct and could not be read. The samples branded Blue Grass Belle proved to be cider vinegar; the samples branded Monogram (blend) proved to be compound vinegar. Samples No. 4435 and No. 4440 were branded on the barrel "Our Own Apple Cider Vinegar," but proved to be compound products.

When vinegar is sold without naming the class to which it belongs, according to the standards adopted by the Secretary of Agriculture of the United States, it means a product made from apples. Therefore, when a vinegar is sold under a brand name it should state the class to which it belongs; otherwise, it will be, according to the standards, presumed to be an apple cider vinegar; then in case it is not an apple vinegar, it will be classed as misbranded.

Since the sale of intoxicating liquors is prohibited in North Carolina, outside of incorporated towns, and many of the towns have passed local option laws, and therefore license to sell intoxicants cannot be had in those places, there is a tendency to evade the law by selling beverages that are supposed to be, and even in some cases are labeled non-alcoholic or temperance drinks, many of which contain alcohol. They are sold under various names, the phosphates and ciders often naming the fruit from which they are supposed to be made. Most of them, however, are artificial products and contain no fruit juice at all.

Within the past year 91 samples of this class of beverages have been sent to the department by local dealers, city officials and others, for the determination of alcohol and adulterants.

Of these samples 32 were adulterated with either a chemical preservative or a coal-tar dye, and 65 of them contained alcohol varying in amounts from 0.3 per cent. to 12 per cent.

California cherries are quoted at $2.50 to $2.75, which is about $1 higher than they should be. The supply is low and the demand good.

THE GROCERY MARKETS

Tea.

The tea market has shown little or no change during the past week. There has been a fair demand, partly accountable by the fact that the supply of new teas is increasing. The first new-crop English Breakfasts arrived during the week, the market having opened on the other side 15 to 20 per cent. above last year. The demand for all new teas is good, and old teas are sharing to some extent. Prices show no change for the week.

Coffee.

The market for Rio and Santos coffee was stupid early in the week, but the interests representing the syndicate entered and managed to advance the option market 10 to 15 points. Actual Brazil coffee is unchanged. This fine work was largely accomplished through the syndicate's press bureau, which exploited a letter from a Brazil coffee house speaking gloomily of the coming crop. The whole campaign, however, together with its results, was wholly artificial. The monumental Brazil coffee crop of 1906-7 has now been totalled, and reaches the stupendous aggregate of 19,654,000 bags, against 10,227,000 bags in 1905-6 and 9,668,000 bags in 1904-5. Naturally these figures create a very bearish feeling, but the syndicate's power seems not yet to be gone, and it will probably be able to hold the market steady. The actual coffee distributers can checkmate every move, however, by continuing a hand to mouth buying and refusing to carry any of the present burden beyond their every-day stocks. Mild coffees are steady and unchanged. Mocha is steady, Java firm and advancing. The consumptive demand for coffee is fair.

Sugar.

The raw sugar market, which has been firm, has weakened slightly during the week, possibly owing to American refiners' efforts to bear the market. There has been no change in refined sugar as yet, but the refiners are credited with the intention of advancing prices within the next few days. The demand for refined sugar is good.

Syrup and Molasses.

Glucose remains unchanged for the week. Compound syrup is selling in a very small way, due to the season, and prices are unchanged. Sugar syrup is wanted to some extent, at ruling prices. Molasses is steady and dull.

Fish.

Mackerel is wanted to some extent, mainly new shores, which are very scarce. Prices are about unchanged. Norway mackerel are still scarce and high. Irish mackerel are dull at ruling prices. Cod, hake and haddock are dull and unchanged in price. Domestic sardines are fairly active at ruling prices. Imported sardines are firm and in fair demand. No prices on any other grade of future salmon have been made as yet, though they are expected within a short time.

Canned Goods.

The canned goods market has been dull during the past week. Tomatoes are unchanged, both spot and futures. Some holders are endeavoring to get $1 for spot goods, f. o. b., but have not succeeded yet so far as can be learned. The outlook is for a fair pack if present weather conditions hold. Corn is quiet and unchanged in price. The prospect is for a pack much smaller than last year. In New York State, for instance, the acreage is little more than half of last year. Peas are unchanged. Country-packed brands, by reason of their greater supply, are ruling from 5 to 7½ cents below prices on Baltimore brands of equal quality. The pack in Baltimore up to date has been small, while the country pack has been fairly large. Peaches are slow, except pies, which are wanted. Apples are unchanged, firm and in fair demand. The Baltimore small line is unchanged. The strawberry pack is about over, being much shorter than usual. Gooseberries are now being packed at a price about $1 per dozen gallons above a year ago. California canned goods are unchanged, the most important packers not having named price as yet.

Dried Fruits.

Prunes are unchanged, both spot and future, and in quiet demand. Peaches are still scarce, high and dull. Apricots are unchanged and almost prohibitively priced. Raisins are firm and scarce. On spot the supply of choice seeded has been cornered and the price advanced ¼ cent in

Window-Dressing Articles Wanted

For several months the "Grocery World" has been looking for the right man to take charge of its "Window-Dressing Department" and contribute a good, suggestive weekly article. We have tried several, but none was exactly what was wanted.

We will now attempt to get these articles from our subscribers, probably every one of whom has some technical knowledge of window-dressing. What we want is articles clearly describing window displays that can be made by the average retailer; not necessarily new or original—in fact, those which have been used successfully are perhaps preferable to all others.

For all acceptable articles, the "Grocery World" will pay an average price of $5 each. All matter sent in under this arrangement should be addressed to the "Window-Dressing Department." If drawings are also sent they should be made throughout in black ink (not pencil).

consequence. Future currants are in good demand at firm price. Spot currants are in fair demand at ruling values. Apples are firm at a considerable advance within the last few weeks.

Beans and Peas.

Pea beans show a decline from previous prices, not only in secondary markets, but at primary points also. The present price ranges from $1.75 to $1.78. Marrows are unchanged. California limas are very strong, and in spite of the large crop prospects many shippers are unwilling to sell futures at present prices. All beans are in fairly good demand. Yellow split peas are unchanged, firm and in moderate demand. Green splits are firm and high, ruling around $2.65, against a normal price of $2. Green and Scotch whole peas are firm and high.

Butter.

The butter market is unchanged, but very firm. The quality is running very fancy, and the speculative and consumptive demand together absorb all of the receipts. The outlook is for high prices all summer. Stocks in storage are only about half what they were a year ago, and the outlook is firm, though the controlling element is the weather. Warm weather means shorter make and high prices, while cool and rainy weather means more butter and lower prices. All grades are equally firm.

Eggs.

The egg market shows little change from last week. Fancy fresh eggs are getting scarcer all the time, and the bulk of the receipts are showing up poor and heated and have to be sold at lower prices. The outlook is for a little firmer market in the near future, with possibly an advance of 1 cent per dozen within a short time. Under grades of eggs will probably not share in the advance, as the price is already nominal.

Cheese.

The cheese market is very firm at the recent advance of ½ cent per pound, which was caused by a sharp speculative demand. The make is about normal and it is believed that prices are about high enough, and that the next change will be a slight decline. Cheese is running very good for the season, and there is a good consumptive demand.

Provisions.

The market for all lines of smoked meats remains unchanged. Although there is no change in prices, there is a somewhat firmer feeling, due to increased demand. The price, however, is already above normal, so that no further upward change is expected during the next few months. The supply is about normal. Both pure and compound lard are firm at unchanged prices, with a good trade for both grades. Canned meats and barrel pork are steady and unchanged, with a better demand as the season advances. Dried beef shows an advance of 1 cent and an increased demand.

Produce.

New potatoes, $2 to $2.50 per barrel, demand fair; old potatoes, 35 cents per bushel, demand fair; cabbage, $1.25 to $1.50 per barrel, demand fair to good; Egyptian onions, $3.25 per bag, demand good; Texas onions, $2.25 to $2.50 per crate, demand good; Bermudas, $1.60 to $2 per crate,

HERE'S HOW WE BRING YOU TRADE

One of the reasons we give why grocers should handle Clicquot Club Ginger Ale is that we are continually working to get them trade for it. Here's a sample postal card we send out to a grocer's customers:

DEAR FRIEND:—I never worry about what kind of refreshments to have these hot summer evenings when we have company drop in on us unawares. I got the idea from Mrs. Watkins. You know we both deal at James Johnson & Sons, 7119-21 Germantown Avenue, and always through the summer we have on hand a case of Clicquot Club soft drinks which they recommend so highly. The case holds two dozen and you can get it assorted, Ginger Ale, Sarsaparilla and Blood Orange. Order some at once and save yourself a lot of future anxiety. Johnson's Phone numbers are C. H. 1041 D. and C. H. 1003 A.

FLOSSIE.

P. S.—They also have all makes of Grape Juice, Imported Ginger Ale, Lemon Soda and Root Beer.

This sort of thing gets business—for you. Beside this kind of advertising we are constantly doing other kinds—in papers and magazines that go all over the country.

So that every case of Clicquot Club Ginger Ale you put in is half sold.

Nuts.

Peanuts, green, choice, 5½ cents per pound; fancy, 7 cents; jumbo, large, 8 cents; roasted, choice, $1.25 per bushel; fancy, $1.50; jumbo, large, $1.65, demand fair; Brazil nuts, 8½ cents per pound; filberts, 10½ cents; pecans, 16 cents; walnuts, marbots, 12½ cents; mixed nuts, 11½ cents, demand poor.

MARKET NOTES.

Near-by pie cherries are very scarce and the price ranges from 10 to 11 cents per pound, which is about three times what it should be. The demand is good.

Blackberries are coming from Delaware, Maryland and North Carolina, and range from 10 to 13 cents.

New Jersey huckleberries are in and average 16 cents. The demand is good.

North Carolina corn is coming North and averages $3. The quality is fair and the demand fair.

Raspberries are now coming from New Jersey and range from 10 to 11 cents per pint. The demand is good and the supply light.

California cantaloupes can now be bought for $4 per crate. The demand is good and the quality of the fruit excellent.

Window Dressing for Grocers

In this department from now on will appear each week suggestive articles regarding the proper use of the retail grocer's window. An endeavor will be made to deal with the subject practically, in other words, to show grocers how they can turn their windows into a money-making feature of their business. Subscribers are invited to make free use of the department by submitting both queries or suggestions.

Summer Window Display for Meat Market.

By Charles M. Steele,
Assistant Advertising Manager National Cash Register Co.

To arrange this inexpensive window display, secure some old box lumber and make a picket fence. Borrow one dozen cheap split baskets; fill with excelsior and cover the top with white napkins. Place these in the corner, as shown above.

On the floor in the centre place a basket with a few buns made up into sandwiches. In this basket you can also put some tinned meats. On the fence put sign offering suggestions for outings and hot weather lunches. You can make the grass by dipping the excelsior in green Diamond dye. Get trees from any near-by woods.

If you want the display to last a good while, it will be better to put artificial leaves on the trees, as natural ones wither and fall.

The only expense is for the Diamond dye, can of water color to paint the fence, cost of having a sign made, and the price of wooden plates and paper napkins.

Florida is shipping all the watermelons now on the market. The range is 20 to 40 cents and the quality fair.

String beans are now from near-by points and average 75 cents per basket. Southern beans average $1 per half-barrel.

No limas to speak of have as yet made their appearance.

Georgia is contributing all the peaches on the market, at a price ranging from $2.50 to $3.50. Georgia peaches will be comparatively scarce and high all the season.

Peas are the only line that shows anything like a glut. They are coming from near-by points and range from 20 to 40 cents. The quality seems good.

Renovated Butter Will Henceforth Be Called "Process" Butter.

Secretary Cortelyou, of the Treasury Department, and Secretary Wilson, of the Agricultural Department, have reached an agreement in regard to the protest made some time ago by the renovated butter combination, as the result of which the so-called trust may in the future label its product "process butter" instead of "renovated butter." The trust has long contended for this privilege as one accorded by the act of May 9, 1902. By the same order the two departments changed the classification, so that in the future much of the product, which has been taxed one-fourth of 1 per cent. as "process butter," will in the future pay 10 cents a pound as an adulterated article.

The food inspector's wife was looking over her husband's notebook. "George," she said, "how do you pronounce the last syllable of this word, 'butterine'?" "The last syllable," the inspector answered, "is always silent."

Demonstrated at Jamestown.

Messrs. McCormick & Co., Baltimore, advise us that they have been agreeably surprised at the interest taken in their exhibit at Jamestown by the consumers. In nearly every instance the consumer has expressed surprise that such high-grade goods as Bee and Banquet brand extracts, spices and teas were manufactured, and have invariably asked McCormick & Co.'s demonstrators what grocer in their town handled these goods. What does this mean? Does it not look like the merchant who handles these goods will be benefited by the advertising McCormick & Co. are doing?

They intend to follow up the consumers who have tested their goods and see that they get what they want. Have you the goods in stock? Bee and Banquet brands extracts, spices and teas are strictly high-grade, handsomely labeled and cartoned, pay the retailer a good profit and please the consumer.

Write McCormick & Co. and ask them for a sample of their goods and try them yourselves. They will be glad to send them so that you also can test the goods in question.

THE SCIENCE OF ADVERTISING

This Department is devoted to the criticism of advertising matter sent in, to the devising of new advertising ideas for special occasions, upon request, and to the suggesting of original advertisements when data is supplied. All communications sent in for this Department should be addressed to the Editor of Science of Advertising. They will be filed in their order and taken up according to strict rotation.

Philadelphia, June 29, 1907.
Editor "Science of Advertising."

Dear Sir:—I have purchased a store in the suburb of Philadelphia. I find it in a very badly run-down condition.

There seems to be a good field to work on, but the trade have lost all confidence in the place, as it seems my predecessor had no stock when they wanted it, and as a result they have slipped away.

How, in your opinion, is the best way to come in contact with them again? My idea was to get up a good, catchy advertisement and instead of monthly payments make them weekly and then cut some of the prices. I feel that the competition is strong and some inducement must be offered. However, my competition is all high priced.

Kindly publish your idea of the best course to pursue. The trade is here if it can be got.

Kindly treat the matter confidentially. Thanking you in advance,

Yours truly, F.

My advice to this correspondent is not to depend on advertising at all—he should see each prospective customer personally. This grocer is up against one of the hardest propositions a merchant can face. Through no fault of his own he is saddled with a store which has acquired a bad or at least a loose reputation. If he is to succeed he must overcome this reputation, which is a monumental job. Still, it can be done.

I assume that the above correspondent has been long enough in his new place to be able to make up some sort of a list of the people he has a right to expect will become customers. I should do this and then plan to see so many a day until the whole list have been seen. You can do more in five minutes' straight talk than you can in a year of advertising. There is nothing like personal solicitation.

In seeing people I should frankly admit, if it is the fact, that the store has not been run properly. I should explain that I was trying to overcome this bad reputation and expected to give everybody the squarest deal I could. This sort of talk can't fail to make an impression—an impression far deeper than the best-written advertising can make.

As I went through the list with my calls I should keep a careful account to see who bought goods. Those who did not within a reasonable time I should see again, and again and again—not obtrusively, but perseveringly—until they are either brought back or make it so plain that they can't be gotten, that they can safely be dropped as hopeless.

All this time I should be doing steady advertising, of course. If you are in a suburb of Philadelphia, newspaper advertising is probably out of the question, so for a while at least, I should issue circulars or folders and mail or deliver them direct to the list you have prepared. Don't make them cheap, or flashy or sensational. Employ a good printer and don't be afraid to spend a little money to get good work—it will pay you many fold in the end. Remember, you are now at the most critical point in your career—the point where you are forming your own reputation in a new neighborhood. As for the matter for this advertising, I should pick out a line of seasonable things and push them. A good plan would be to make one good big drive a week. Get hold of a special somewhere and sell it just as close as you can. Remember you are fishing for fish who don't want to be caught and your bait must be rather unusual.

If this correspondent will carry out this plan carefully and persistently, even for a year, if necessary, I am just as sure that he will get the old trade back as I am that I am writing these words.

Another Result of the Chicago Meat Scandal. Meat Trade in China.

Prior to the Chicago beef scandal of two years ago large supplies of American packing-house products were imported for use by the German troops stationed in China, but the purchase of such goods is now prohibited, and supplies are either procured from Germany direct or from Australia. American tinned meats can be found on the local Chinese markets, and from the large and continually new stock on hand in the shops it would appear that there was excellent trade for these goods. English goods are also found on the market and seem to be as much in demand as American. They include Frankfort, smoked pork and Bologna sausages, breakfast bacon and smoked bacon, smoked hams and pigs' tongues, while pigs' feet and other pork products are imported in barrels. There is a model slaughterhouse in Tsingtau, which has been built within the last three years, and is modern in every particular. All animals are medically inspected and held for twenty-four hours before being butchered, and twenty samples of the meat from each animal are microscopically examined before being placed on the market. All diseased animals and meats are cremated and all refuse disposed of in the same cleanly manner. With the excellent cold-storage facilities attached to the plant there is not the necessity for tinned or salted meats that is found in other China ports. The slaughterhouse is entirely under government control.

Two Extremes.

There are two extremes in nearly all lines of business. The one extreme in the grocery business is the progressive grocer with up-to-date ideas and who has gained the confidence of his customers and can sell them any article of merit whether advertised extensively or not. The other extreme is the grocer who cannot sell his customer anything unless they ask for it. Opportunity knocks at the door of both merchants; one hears the knock and opens the door to admit progress; the other keeps it closed and sends opportunity to seek shelter elsewhere.

The same extremes are found in the policies of the various manufacturers. One manufacturer will look upon the grocer as a matter of convenience and appreciate him only to the very smallest extent. This manufacturer will pack his product, advertise it extensively to the consumers and use the retailer, with a small margin of profit, to supply the trade he has created. The other extreme is the manufacturer who looks upon the retailer as a partner in the selling of his products and believes he should receive real consideration and compensation for his efforts.

Manufacturers have various ways of showing their appreciation of the retailers' efforts. Some of them will put on a deal from time to time wherein the retailer can get an extra profit on the product. The retailer who realizes his opportunity and can sell an article of merit will look out for these deals from time to time and confine his efforts as largely as possible to the goods made by the manufacturer who in this way appreciates his co-operation. The free goods given away on these deals are not considered as a reduction in the price, but instead are an extra compensation for effort put forth on the part of the retailer to assist the manufacturer in selling their products to the consumer.

The retailer that can take an article of merit and sell it is entitled to more consideration than the one that cannot sell goods and instead forces the manufacturer to sell them for him. The T. A. Snider Preserve Co. give a good illustration of this policy with their free catsup deal exploited elsewhere in our columns, and live grocers don't want to miss it.

This Tells the Tale

A product which has been on the market fifty-eight years is a product which has stood the hardest of all tests—the test of time. "Knight's Cooking Extracts" is a phrase familiar to man, woman and child, from the Atlantic to the Pacific and from the Lakes to the Gulf. It is easy to tell why; no housewife ever had a bottle go back on her and no housewife ever will. Good extracts must be on your shelves. Grocers, if you sell Knight's Extracts we need say nothing more to you; if you don't, we want one order from you—we are sure of more. You are certain of their absolute purity and a good profit.

A Fashion Article.

I had occasion to go into the store of an old customer last Wednesday—a fellow I've known for years—and when I didn't see him I asked one of the clerks where he was.

"He's back in the yard," said the clerk. "He's got a lovely grouch on, too."

I went back after him. It was a hot day and he was piling up a lot of boxes—sweaty, red and sniffy. After he'd thrown a couple of snappy answers at me I said:—

"Say, what's the matter with you, anyway? Your temper seems feeverish."

"Oh, I'm sick of this whole —— business!" he snapped out. "People only look on a grocer as a sort of second-class servant! They think you're beneath 'em—only fit to buy lard and butter from!"

"My boy," I said, "something's hit you. What it is?"

He told we what it was. To make a long story short, he had gone to the house of a customer about an order, and had gone up the front way as he thought he had a right to do. The customer had a lot of swell people sitting on the porch, and she asked him to go around to the back door.

That's what had started him off. "Treated like a common servant!" "Hustled around to the back door like the swill man!" "Didn't think I was good enough to stand a minute on her front lawn!" These were a few of the sore knocks that he relieved himself of to me.

"And the worst of it is," he said, with malicious satisfaction, "I can buy and sell her husband twice over!"

"How long ago did this happen?" I asked.

"Just this morning," he answered.

"Did you wear the same duds you've got on?" I asked.

"Why, sure!" he said, "think I change my clothes every hour?"

"Well, then," I said, "I don't wonder that woman booted you to the back door."

He looked at me as mad as could be.

"Now, hold on, old man," I said, "don't get mad. I've known you ten years and I'm going to talk straight, for you need it. You say you can buy and sell that fellow, and you probably know. I don't doubt it if you say so. But to judge from your personal appearance you're worth about 2 cents."

"What in thunder are you talking about!" he demanded. "Tryin' to get me mad? Whose business is it how I look?"

"Mine," I said, "when you unload on my valuable time something that wouldn't have happened if you had looked decent.

"You ought to size yourself up," I said. "To begin with, that suit never cost over $10 and the pants have long ago forgot they ever had a shape. Why don't you press 'em? You can't get a decent suit for $10 (he didn't deny that it cost under that). Your shirt ain't clean, either. Look at the sweat marks around the collar. Why in thunder do you wear a rubber collar? No man looks well-dressed with a rubber collar—think what would happen if somebody hit it with a lighted match.

"Don't you suppose the woman could size you up just as I do?" I asked him. "You created in her mind the impression she had of you. Look at your shoes—and a shine only 5 cents."

All through this he stood hot and red, not liking it at all.

"I know you don't like it, old man," I said, "and I'm sorry if I hurt your feelings, but, by gad, it was coming to you. You've got a right to be well dressed and look like a gentleman. You can afford the best, and you know it. But, by gad, you don't look it. I'll bet a dollar that if you'd gone up to that house in a decent made-to-order suit, with clean shoes and a good shirt on, the woman wouldn't have dreamed of sending you around back. Instead, she'd probably have introduced you to her friends."

Well, I stopped then, and he stood looking at me in a funny way that I couldn't understand. The mad had gone, but I knew there was something behind it.

Finally I got suspicious.

"Well, what is it?" I demanded. "Go ahead and say it!"

"Well, by George, I've seen some great nerve in my time," began the grocer when he got ready, "but I'll be ——— if I ever saw such a magnificent exhibition of it as I have just now. You're a hen of a man to talk to me about lookin' like a sport! You to roast me about my clothes and my shoes! Why, look at yourself, you old rip! Look at your suit and your shoes! You ain't got on any rubber collar—if you had it wouldn't be all sweated down and yellow in front! What's that I see all over the front of your shirt? Not sweat—oh, don't tell me that's sweat!"

Well, the fool ran on like this for some time, and between you and me, everything he said was right. I'm no dude—d'ye ever see a fat man who could be a dude on a hot day?

Finally after he'd let out a 10-horse power bleat of silly laughter that seemed to do him good I said:—

"Old man, I'll admit I'm no better than you are. I know how a man ought to dress, but I've always been too lazy to do it. And I haven't the least doubt it's cost me a heap of money. I've seen men not as good as I was look at me with a sneer in their eyes simply because I was sloppy. I admit it, so after all I'm the best man to call you down—I've seen the bad effects of what you're doing in myself."

Judging by the effect what he said has had on me, I don't believe what I said'll have much effect on him. But we sloppy devils lose a lot! Everybody judges us by our appearance. If we let ourselves get cheap and sloppy, that's the kind of hairpins we are to them—cheap and sloppy. They size us up that way, and they treat us that way.

You let a genius in a dirty shirt and a lunkhead in good clothes go into a man's office together, both unknown, and one hundred times out of one hundred the lunkhead will get the most consideration. From everybody, office boy up!

The genius may make good afterward, but he lacks the good opening.

When I get in Congress I'm going to do some stunts in the way of legislation that'll cure all this.

I'm going to pass a law forbidding the sale of rubber collars.

A law compelling every man to wear a suit that costs at least $15.

A law compelling him to get his shoes shined every day and to change his shirt and his collar every day.

The minute those laws go into effect a whole lot of sloppy weathers that are now just shuffling along will begin to make money.

If laws like these had been passed twenty-five years ago I'd been further ahead to-day, you can take it from me.

Food Law Restrictions Advance Java Coffee.

June Sale Goes Off at Two Cents Above Price in June, 1906. Increased Demand Due to Federal Food Law Requirements as to Labeling the Cause.

Early in the present year the "Grocery World" predicted that the market for Java coffee would probably show some sharp advances during 1907, by reason of the increased demand necessitated by the fact that inferior coffees could not under the Federal food law be labeled "Java." This journal reasoned that this meant either a change of label, or the use of real Java in many cases where no Java had been used.

The June sale of Padang Java, which controls the Java market as No. 7 Rio controls the Rio market, was made at a large way price of 16¼ cents, which shows an advance of 2 cents per pound above the price ruling in June of 1906. This advance was fully warranted by the supply and demand basis. The crops of Java coffee are small and the consumption greatly increased since the Federal food law became operative.

It is the judgment of many conservatives that Padang Java will reach 20 cents per pound before the current year ends, which would mean a further advance of between 3 and 4 cents.

Other grades of Java show relatively the same advance.

No Jersey tomatoes are in as yet, but a few may come in any day. It will be two weeks, however, before the real receipts begin. All of the tomatoes now on the market are from Mississippi, and the market is firm at $1.25. Very likely it may advance still further, as the demand is good.

Useful Facts About Groceries

The department which will henceforth be conducted under the above head is best explained by the letter which appears below, and which was recently sent to the "Grocery World." In the hope that a little such matter may be of interest and value to "Grocery World" readers, a short educational article along the lines indicated will appear under this head from time to time.

Vermontville, N. Y.

Editor "Grocery World."

Dear Sir:—I have long wanted a book which would be a sort of encyclopædia, one that would take a certain article, describe it, tell where it grew, how it was prepared for market, what season of the year it was marketed, how it should be stored, whether in a cold or warm place.

Such a book was published once, but as near as I can find out it is out of print now.

I was thinking if the "Grocery World" could devote, say, half a column a week to a work of this kind we would have, in a little while, the long-looked-for work.

But I won't ask for too much, for we are getting good things all the time.

Very truly yours, N. H. BRECKENRIDGE.

Congou.

A generic name for the teas exported from Hankow, in China.

The word Congou itself is a corruption of the Chinese term Kung-fu (labor), referring to the labor or work required in manipulating this sort. The tea is a common quality of black, but a grade above Bohea, with larger leaf, not so dusty. The Congous grown in the north of Amoy are of superior quality, and probably the best come from Ningchow, although also furnished by Hu-Kuang and Ho-Nan. The best black teas of Fukien are also designated by the generic terms of Congou and Souchong. These come from the districts of Tenmon, Kaisu, Seng-Cheng, Cheng-Lock, Pan-Yang, You-Kai, Pack-Long, Pack-Ling, etc.

Moning Congou is a sort of the same tea produced at Wuning, a district and city, the name of which means "military rest."

Foie Gras.

Fatty livers of geese.

Foie Gras au Naturel.

Preserved liver.

Foie Gras Entière.

Whole liver.

Foie Gras, Pâte de.

Goose liver paste.

Foie Gras Saucissons Truffés.

Truffled sausages.

The whole of the above costly and fashionable French delicacies are composed of the fatty and degenerated livers of geese, cruelly and abnormally fed or crammed for the purpose in dark cellars or similar places.

The chief seat of the business is at Strasburg, now under German rule, but some are also prepared at Toulouse.

Foie gras is also made at Nerac, but this make is prepared from the liver of the musk-duck.

Many persons think that foie gras originated with the epicurean Louis XIV, but it dates back to the first French revolution, and was very popular during the Napoleonic wars.

The fattening of geese for these purposes is carried on in Strasburg very extensively. It is chiefly in the hands of women and is almost entirely confined to the winter season. Any working man's wife, with a few shillings to invest, can embark in it, and so tempting is the profit that the city of Strasburg may be said to be honeycombed with cellars stuffed in winter with live geese. These fatteners, or "crammers," buy geese from the farmers late in autumn, either lean or half-fattened. Sometimes the geese are fed first for two or three weeks with broad beans, and then for eight or ten days with maize; others feed with maize from the beginning. The birds are usually confined in very narrow coops or wooden cages in which they may move backward or forward a few inches, but not turn round. The cage has a narrow opening in front through which the bird can put its head to drink water from a vessel in which a lump of charcoal is placed. The cramming of the poor creatures is performed twice or thrice a day; it is dragged forth by the feeder, who places it firmly between her knees, opens the beak with one hand and crams the maize—previously parboiled in water and seasoned with salt—down the gullet with the other. Experts simply push the food down with the finger, but less skillful hands use a funnel with a smooth stick to expedite the descent. Sometimes balls made of potato flour and barley are used instead of or alternately with the maize. The goose is then thrust back into its living tomb to digest this unnatural gorging, and the process is repeated until the poor bird may be said to sweat fat through all the pores of its body; its cellular tissue, its intestines, its blood, nay even its very evacuations are absolutely loaded with fat; and it is asserted to be a very common practice with Strasburg goose-feeders to submit these droppings to a melting process. In the last stage of fattening the crammer has to be very careful in watching the eyes of the bird and in handling it. Cases of apoplexy are by no means rare, even an unlucky blow or a hard squeeze will often kill it, and this is a rather serious loss, for the liver will be found filled with dark-colored blood and almost useless. But even these livers are often minced fine, squeezed through a tammy, and mixed with goose fat to serve as a lining for the "terrine." When, however, the proper time for killing the bird has come, it is done with a knife; and the liver, swelled to an enormous size, will weigh one or two and sometimes as much as three pounds. This is very carefully removed so that no scratch or other blemish may appear upon it, and should be of a light salmon or cream color. Livers weighing 1½ to 2 pounds each are frequently taken from quite small geese which only weigh 6 or 7 pounds when drawn, and which may have consumed some twenty quarts of maize in the feeding. The livers are next wrapped in a wet muslin or linen cloth and sold to the packer, manufacturer or pastry cook, who pays for them, according to size and quality, about 3/- per pound for small liver to 6/- and 7/- per pound for livers of over 2 pounds each. The manufacturer peels, seasons and spices the raw liver, after which he places it in the "terrine" (tureen) along with peeled truffles and other ingredients.

The highest priced are "Foie Gras Entière," those consisting of whole livers of large size; while the less expensive "Foie Gras au Natural" may contain two or three small livers. When the contents of a terrine have been duly baked, a layer of fresh hog's lard is poured over the mass to keep it from contact with the air.

Pâtés de foie gras are only a mixture, and usually composed of 10 parts of goose liver, 15 of fresh lean pork, chopped very fine, 10 of fresh lard, 5 of truffles, and 2½ parts of sausage meat, and are often baked in crust to sell at prices from 10/6 to £5 each.

Other specialties of this nature are Saucissons (sausages) de Foies gras truffés, Pain de Foies gras, and Timbales de Foies gras.

Considering that these preparations (many doctors say diseased livers) are sent from Strasburg for the delectation of gourmets in all parts of the world, it is not surprising that this industry—a wicked and cruel one at the best—aggregates yearly some hundreds of thousands of pounds. Nearly 200,000 pounds are exported yearly, value about £36,000, an average of, say, 3/6 per pound.

Bolting Meat and Other Things.

New York, July 2, 1907.

Editor "Grocery World."

Dear Sir:—I was interested and amused to peruse in your esteemed issue of June 17th the article on Dr. Wiley's latest advice in reference to bolting instead of chewing meat. This theory is contrary to the teachings of modern science. There has been more matter written in reference to food products since the embalmed beef controversy than ever before in the history of the world, and it is high time that the public should pay more attention to the food it consumes. The pure food law materially assists the public in protecting itself against adulterated foods. There has been a great deal of matter, however, printed in reference to food that was not authentic. While it is true there are a great many packers who do not know the advantage of hygienic surroundings in their plants, and adulterate food products so as to lessen their food value, the majority of the packers of foodstuffs are desirous of keeping their plants in an hygienic condition and packing the best quality of food. There are many persons who are always endeavoring to obtain bargains in foods and believe it economy to purchase canned goods of an inferior quality, which contain a surplus of water.

The question of dietetics is more thoroughly understood at present than it has ever been before, and if one is desirous of maintaining his system in good order he must know how to balance his rations so that he has proper material for repairing the waste. When scientists learn exactly how to balance our rations so as to repair waste as fast as it occurs we will be eligible candidates for Dr. Wiley's hundred-year club. If we follow Dr. Wiley's advice in reference to bolting meat, however, it might have a tendency to materially shorten our lives. There are a great many sinews in meat that the average person cannot masticate, consequently it must either be bolted or expectorated. All authorities on dietetics advocate thorough mastication of all food products. It seems reasonable to suppose that as man is an omniverous animal he should govern himself accordingly. If he were a carniverous animal, wild and ferocious, as most all carniverous animals are, it might be policy for him to bolt his meat, but as he is not his digestive organs will no doubt appreciate having meat thoroughly masticated.

The public was first shocked in reference to food during the Spanish-American war, when the press of the country declared the beef was embalmed. There was so much written in reference to embalmed beef that the Government appointed Prof. Mendle, of Yale, to analyze samples of the so-called embalmed beef. Prof. Mendle, in making his report,

We Are Going to PAY You to Push OUR Goods

We want grocers everywhere to push our stove polish and we are going to make it worth their while, by showing them how they can get almost any article of merchandise they may want, either for their homes or stores, absolutely free—harness, wagons, scales, safes, roll-top desks, any kind of furniture, silverware, and even pianos. Write us for particulars. The quality of these goods is guaranteed by the stated that there was not a trace of preservative found in the so-called embalmed beef. The press, however, claimed the report was whitewashed. The report of the meat being embalmed was caused by some meat spoiling. The fact that the meat spoiled proved conclusively that it was not embalmed. Ever since that time there have been quite a number of exaggerated reports in reference to our food products. There is no question but what there was a great deal of adulterated food on the market, but the articles of food which were adulterated were the condiments, spices, syrups, etc. Large quantities of our food products, however, such as fresh meat, potatoes, cabbages, all fresh vegetables, oranges, grapefruit, bananas and such articles were not adulterated. Our cereals, such as oatmeal, cornmeal, etc., were not adulterated. There is no evidence, however, of the ordinary preservatives ever having caused harm to any person who has partaken of foods preserved with such substances. There has been a great deal of sickness, and many deaths, since the pure food law was enforced, however, on account of the lack of preservatives. According to the press, there have been over 3,000 cases of ptomaine poisoning since the pure food law went into effect.

Yours truly,
H. H. Langdon.

Two Reports of the Baltimore Canned Goods Market.

No. 1.

Baltimore, Md., July 5, 1907.
Editor "Grocery World."

Dear Sir:—Fine weather for growing tomatoes continues to prevail in this section and the good effect of it is very apparent. Much of the lost time will be regained, provided, of course, there is no further setback to the crop. It begins to look like we are now past the principal danger spots, but it would be premature to say, at this time, that a big crop is already assured. Several things can yet happen to the crop if it is true, but having already had their share of trouble the optimists among the growers and canners are feeling greatly relieved and encouraged by the developments of the last two weeks. The question of getting sufficient labor at the canneries this summer seems to be now the most important problem yet to be solved in connection with the canning of tomatoes as well as corn. The latter article is also sharing in the improved weather conditions, greatly to the relief of the canners, who had good reasons to feel blue over the outlook. The early crop of string beans has not been benefited to any large extent, however, and the pack of that item will be much below the usual output. Two-thirds of the season for canning peas has passed, and to the surprise and continued disappointment of everyone the demand for fresh peas has been so large that the high prices for the raw material for canning purposes have prevailed up to this time. The best quality of the crop of Early Junes has been packed, and from now on the canners will have to depend upon larger receipts at a lower cost from which to make their output of seconds. As only about two weeks remain of the usual canning season the chances for lower prices for that grade are not favorable. Perhaps there has never been a previous season when the surrounding conditions were so harassing and disappointing to the grower, canner and jobber alike. There is a good demand for nearly every article in the line of vegetables, and those which have not already advanced in prices are having their innings, even soaked peas steadily advancing from 40 to 52½ cents a dozen.

Our canners will soon make prices on the coming pack of peaches of all grades, and it goes without saying that the demand for them will be very large from the start. No one expects even an ordinary crop of them this season and no one ventures to make any predictions in that direction. The chief demand will be for unpeeled peaches and for seconds and standards and those who get their orders placed early may fare best. The crops of red and white cherries are practically failures in this section. Gooseberries are short, and raspberries and blueberries are reported to be in bad shape, while on the other hand the crop of blackberries, due next week, is said to be excellent. The pack of strawberries is much below the average in quantity, but of good quality, and they are likely to advance in prices. Pineapples are strong and worth attention. The pear crop is reported to be in a bad way, and apples may be short, too. Cove oysters are firmer because of light stocks.

Yours truly,
Thos. J. Meehan & Co.

Editor "Grocery World."

Dear Sir:—We are having an excellent demand for spot tomatoes and are selling quite a quantity at $1 per dozen for less than carload lots, and for straight carload lots we are filling our orders at 97½ cents per dozen.

Considering the lateness of the season, it is doubtful if any new goods can be put on the market much before the middle of August, so it looks as though there will be at least six weeks for the sale of spot tomatoes. It

AN OLD SOAP FRIEND
Not a grocer in business but has heard of B. T. Babbitt's Best Soap. For sixty years it has been the best kitchen and laundry soap, holding its own through heavy competition, yet showing larger sales to-day than ever before in its history.
Most grocers sell Babbitt's Best Soap, and wouldn't be without it under any circumstances. If the reader hereof does not, let us remind him that in all the history of laundry soap no brand has ever given such absolute and perfect satisfaction as looks as though when the trade realize that deliveries of new tomatoes will be late there will be a disposition to take hold of spot goods more freely.

The market on futures nominally continues strong at 70 and 90 cents per dozen for No. 2 and No. 3 standards. Some deals are being made here and there at 67½ and 87½ cents per dozen. In spite of the more favorable weather conditions there are practically no sellers of future tomatoes in the market, and quite a number of packers say they would not be tempted even on orders at 70 and 90 cents per dozen. Sales of futures have unquestionably been heavy, and we believe the majority of the packers in this section are disposed not to take any more business until the packing season has progressed far enough to enable them to see what the packing will actually be. We can offer 500 dozen No. 10 standard tomatoes, future delivery, at $2.65 per dozen, less 1½ per cent., f. o. b. Peninsula.

Packing of peas has been going on rather lively this week, though it looks as though the season for the best grade of peas is over. The stock of good standard peas in Baltimore is not large, as packers have been selling rather freely.

The strawberry season here is about over. We have had an unusually heavy demand for fancy preserved strawberries, and stocks are light.

A few new blackberries are being packed and packers are now busy on gooseberries. The outlook for the blackberry crop is fairly good. Gooseberries are not very plentiful. The report on raspberries is very unfavorable. There are practically no cherries in sight. We are having an excellent demand for gooseberries. If you will want anything in the line of gallon gooseberries, we would suggest your taking prompt action.

Yours truly,

The Spice Market.

Baltimore, Md., July 5, 1907.
Editor "Grocery World."

Dear Sir:—The market is fairly active for the season, with a marked increase in demand for pepper, and in fact, a firmer tone generally for full line of spices.

Pepper.—Increased demand for spot goods, and futures are held at higher prices. This especially applies to foreign markets. There is an indication of a small crop of Lampong. We expect to see prices slowly advance on increased demand.

Cayennes are quiet and practically unchanged, prime Bright Chillies being scarce.

Cloves are firmer and in good demand for spot goods. We do not expect to see lower prices on account of the increasing demand.

Gingers are very steady; demand very good, with an upward tendency in all grades.

Pimento (Allspice) is active and higher. Houses in the island will not offer freely. Crop is reported small and poor, and present indications point to much higher prices.

Mace.—Prime stock is scarce and is in good demand.

Nutmegs.—Large arrivals and full stocks have had the tendency of lowering prices, and future offerings, however, are steady and much higher than present values.

Seeds are practically unchanged during the week, Caraway remaining steady and firm. Poppy very steady and upward tendency; Celery unchanged.

Yours truly,
McCORMICK & Co.

English Consumers Beginning to Overlook Our Meat Scandal.

There have been signs of late in England of a re-establishment of public confidence in American meat products. English newspapers have commented favorably on contracts made by British public authorities with Chicago packers. From time to time, also, paragraphs have appeared about the effective system of Government inspection now established in our packing houses. It is generally allowed throughout England that our meat products meet a "felt want," and 1907 is expected to witness a large increase in consumption.

The "Record" Was Wrong.

Said Twenty-five Federal Food Inspectors Were Working in Philadelphia. Local Office Denies It. No Special Campaign on in Philadelphia.

The Philadelphia "Record" of last Tuesday, July 2d, scattered some consternation among the manufacturing and grocery trade of Philadelphia by an item regarding the operations of the Federal food law, which in part read as follows:—

> Twenty-five pure food inspectors, appointed by Secretary of Agriculture Wilson, have been quietly at work in Philadelphia since early in June, looking up violators of the new Federal pure food and drug law, that became effective on January 1st last, and the rigid enforcement of which began yesterday. The inspectors in this city are under the direct control of Dr. Brinton, who has charge of the food inspection laboratory, No. 134 South Second street.

This is not the case. There have not been twenty-five inspectors working in Philadelphia or anything like that number. The entire number appointed to operate throughout the entire country, as a matter of fact, amounts to very little more than that.

There has been very little work done in Philadelphia under the Federal law up to the present time, although there has been some. No special campaign has been carried on here, however. A "Grocery World" representative called on Dr. Brinton, who is in charge of the local laboratory, during the week, and learned that while some samples have been turned into his office for analysis, but little headway had been made up to date, because of certain upsets that had occurred in the office work. The inspectors at work in Philadelphia, however, are restricted to taking samples from dealers who have purchased goods from manufacturers out of the State. For while they have a legal right to inspect local manufacturing plants, samples taken therefrom, even if found to be adulterated, would not come within the provisions of the Federal law, as there had been no interstate shipment.

Dr. Brinton, in the course of a conversation regarding the operations of the Federal food law, took occasion to say that there had been and was on the part of foreign food manufacturers a very marked effort to comply with the law. This, he said, was shown by his examination of samples of imported products.

The name Snider on a bottle of catsup means the standard of excellence and purity. Insist on your grocer supplying you with Snider's catsup.

The little round cracker with "Exton" stamped on it. It has been on the market over half a century, and no consumer will use any other oyster cracker if she can get the Exton, because no oyster cracker can take its place in the esteem of those who know the difference between fair and good.

Meat Must Be Kept Covered

So Says Food Commissioner in Supplementary Regulations. As to Ice Cream and Lard Adulteration. Teaching Farmers to Make Vinegar.

During the week Pennsylvania Food Commissioner Foust has issued a number of supplementary regulations for the enforcement of the new State food law. These are as follows:—

SUPPLEMENT NO. 1 to

Rules and regulations prepared by the Dairy and Food Commissioner of Pennsylvania in pursuance of Section 3, of the Act of June 1, 1907.

Rule 8, lard. Rule 9, fruit or nut ice cream. Rule 10, meats and fish.

Rule 8. Lard must contain no ingredient but the pure fat of swine. Any foreign substance will constitute an adulteration and will be treated accordingly.

Rule 9. Fruit or nut ice cream must be true to name and must not contain less than 10 per cent. of butter fat, together with sugar, eggs and a small amount of gelatine, not exceeding three (3) ounces to ten gallons of cream.

The foregoing rule applies where fruit (fresh or canned) or nuts are used for flavoring.

Rule 10. Meats and fish must at all times be kept in a pure, clean and healthful condition.

In the summer season they must be covered or protected from flies and insects by screens or other device, and must be kept at such temperature as will absolutely prevent any decomposition.

Refrigerators and ice boxes for the storage of meats and fish must be kept well iced and clean.

Stores, market houses and all rooms used for the storage or sale of meats and fish must be clean, properly ventilated and kept in a sanitary condition.

Any meat or fish not so cared for will be considered in violation and treated accordingly.

The Commissioner also issued a statement which is destined to offer an incentive for the home production of vinegar. The salient parts of this are as follows:—

> The provisions of the vinegar law are plain. Under it the farmer can safely prepare and sell vinegar made from apple juice in which neither water, or other foreign substances, drugs or acids of any kind have been introduced. The law does not require any percentage of acetic acid in vinegar thus made; it only prohibits the use of water, or other foreign substances, drugs or acids, and requires that the same when sold shall be branded "fermented vinegar made from pure apple juice." If made and labeled in this way, the farmer has a perfect right to sell it to the trade, and the jobber or merchant offering such product for sale, as referred to above, can do so with safety.
> This statement is made for the information and benefit of farmers desiring to manufacture vinegar from the fruit raised upon their farms, and it is hoped that the liberal character of the statute will be beneficial.

Here Is a Good Scheme!

Grocers sometimes demonstrate these with fine results. The demonstration shows two things—first, the ease with which beef tea, bouillon or soup is made from these capsules, one of which has simply to be dropped in a cup of hot water; then it shows the delicious, spicy flavor.

You can sell hundreds of boxes, and every one at a profit.

WE HAVE THE BEST OF REASONS FOR TALKING ABOUT IT

We make a point of exploiting the fact that you will find "The Bottom as Good as the Top" in Apelpi Evaporated Apples, simply because usually the top is very much better than the bottom. We pride ourselves on this particular brand, have built up a big demand for it on its quality alone—you can do the same thing.

Tell Your Customers They Needn't Be Bothered by Bugs

The famous Egyptian Deodorizer is put up in little boxes containing a dozen cylinders and a little stand to hold them. One of these cylinders placed in the stand and lit will diffuse a most delightful fragrance throughout a house, driving away mosquitoes, flies, moths and other insects, making the atmosphere hygienically pure and sanitary. Make a pyramid of a case of Egyptian Deodorizers, light one, and every customer you have will buy. Universal coupons packed in every case for the dealer.

Ritter's Guaranty

In compliance with the rules and regulations for the enforcement of the Food and Drugs Act published by the Commission appointed for this purpose, we have filed a guaranty covering all our products with the Agricultural Department in Washington under the serial number 1017.

In the future all our products will be labeled in accordance with Regulation Nine as follows: Guaranteed under the Food and Drugs Act, June 30, 1906, No. 1017.

This guaranty is sufficient and covers every sale we make and no individual guaranties are necessary.

It has always been our aim to manufacture pure and wholesome food, to comply with existing laws and to protect all who buy our products, and we shall carry out this principle in the future.

We hope to deserve your continued confidence and patronage.

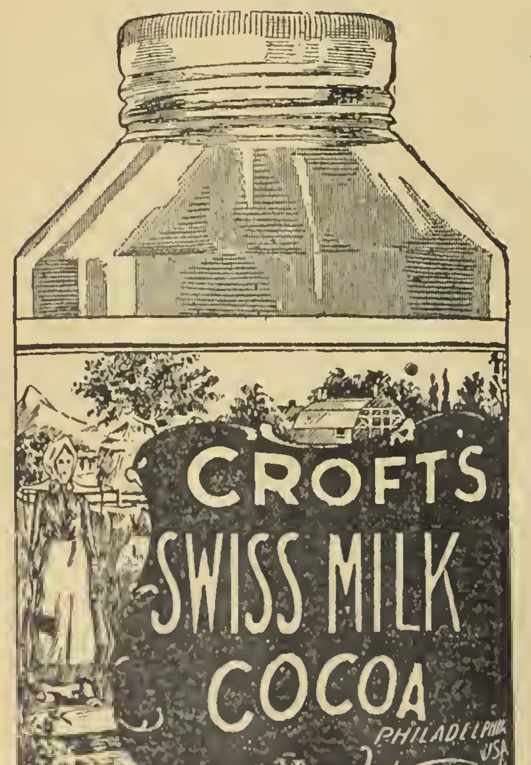
How to Make Other Cocoas as Good as Ours



Take the average cocoa on the market and carry it through another process or two, and you may have an article about as good as Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa.

The trouble is that other manufacturers will not use that "other process or two," because of its cost. They prefer to send out their product half made, as it were—containing indigestible and ill-tasting ingredients which should have been eliminated—so that they can save a little on the cost of making.

Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa has everything taken out that should be taken out, and for that reason, among others, it has the smoothest, finest flavor of any cocoa made.

Will you mention the "Grocery World" when you write?

"Is This What I Made?"

If the cook who invented Baked Beans with tomato sauce were to come back and open up some of the cans labeled Baked Beans he would go gladly back to oblivion.

For "Baked Beans" doesn't always mean baked beans any more. In most cases it means beans boiled or steamed, dampened with a little cheap catsup and packed. The result is an attempted fraud on the palate of him who knows the real thing.

L. & S. Baked Beans are really baked in the good new way. We guarantee that absolutely. Baking makes the bean over. Instead of swelling and mushing it up like steaming or boiling, it leaves it just as firm but mealy and melting.

And our tomato sauce is tomato sauce made by an expert.

If You Get It From Me You Are Certain It Is Right

Italian Macaroni, Olive Oil and Roman Cheese—you don't know as much about these Italian goods as I do, because it's my specialty, and you can believe when I tell you that nothing better comes into this market than Francesco and Luigi Cirillo Macaroni. F. Bertolli's Olive Oil and Roman Cheese are known the world over, and my place is headquarters for all these products.

It Is Spelled R=A=M=L=Y

If you want to sell a really delightful smoke, get the real Ramly, don't take something gotten up to look like the Ramly, because there the similarity ends.

No cigarette ever made has jumped into such immediate popularity. It has become famous on its quality alone.

If you put Ramly Cigarettes in stock you will be assured of the permanent patronage of every man to whom you sell a package.

Don't get confused on the name—it is spelled R-A-M-L-Y.

Robbing Food Laws of Their Terrors

We sell a full line of provisions, but our specialties are

VIENNA SAUSAGES
BOLOGNAS
SMOKED TONGUES

These we sell in very large quantities to the most fastidious trade everywhere.

For two reasons:—

First, they represent the highest possible quality; and

Second, they are absolutely guaranteed to comply with all food laws.

A Remark That Leads to a Sale

"Mrs. Smith, I've got now just about the finest thing in coffee I've ever had in this store. You know what good coffee is—I wan't you to try it."

The coffee to fit this remark is German-American Coffee, grown on the Triunfo Plantation of Central America, among the most celebrated coffee plantations of the world. No coffees surpass them, no, not even the finest Java and Mocha grown! European connoisseurs take German-American Coffee in preference to all others, and formerly the entire output went there.

We are selling these coffees now to the American trade; believe us, there is nothing like them.

Manufacturers have been known to get 60c. per lb. for the same coffee and $1.50 for the same tea that retailers are selling every day for 30c. and 50c. They have done it entirely by the appearance of the package.
We will furnish a package for tea, coffee, etc., ready labeled, which you can fill with goods you buy in bulk, and it will be so handsome you can double your profits.

What you want to do is to "Get Ahead"

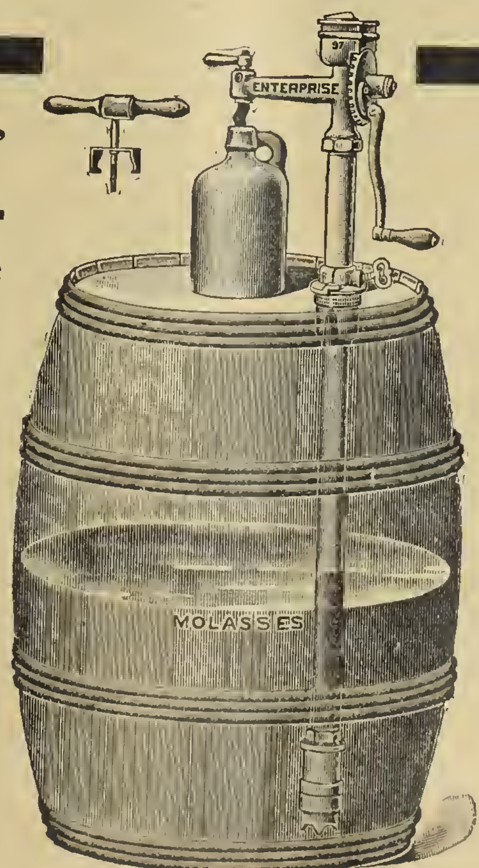
Your best asset is "ENTERPRISE"

"ENTERPRISE"

With New Total Registering Device



The saving of time will doubly pay for it.

The convenience alone will make it worth all it costs.

It is cleaner, as it dispenses with the use of measures and the consequent absence of flies and dirt.

SELF-PRIMING and MEASURING PUMP

Accurately measures molasses, heavy oils, tar and other thick liquids. Has total registering device showing when stock is low in barrel.

No. 97 Pump costs $6.00; Auger, 75 cents; Extension Tube 50 cents a foot.

Grocer's Refrigerator

Every Grocer intends to own a

McCRAY REFRIGERATOR

some time. That time should be NOW. Another year without a McCRAY REFRIGERATOR means you are allowing a useless waste of ice and loss of goods to go on, thus cutting down your profits.

Did you ever consider how many customers you may be losing by selling them butter that they think "Don't taste just right?"

A McCRAY REFRIGERATOR keeps butter and milk sweet and pure. They are perfect refrigerators and will, in a short time, repay their cost through saving of butter and other provisions, and of ice. They are sold entirely on their merits.

McCRAY REFRIGERATORS ARE GUARANTEED

We also build coolers for Meat Markets, Hotels, Restaurants, etc.—in fact for any purpose.

We can here give you but a faint idea of the McCRAY REFRIGERATORS. Let us send you our catalog No. 64, showing our large line of grocers' boxes from which you can make a selection.

WRITE FOR OUR CATALOGS: No. 64 for Grocers, No. 57 for Meat Markets, No. 46 for Hotels, Restaurants, Public Institutions, etc., No. 81 for Residences.

How to Warm Up

To feel you are selling the best products of their class—products of unimpeachable purity and quality—doesn't that give you a warm feeling of satisfaction? We are very sure it does your customers.

Ralston Health Food and Purina Whole Wheat Flour are two such products. We have talked purity—purity—purity in connection with them, for months and years. They're the finest products of their class, and millions of consumers have been led through our advertising to demonstrate this fact for themselves.

Ralston Health Food is the treated hearts of selected wheat. Purina Whole Wheat Flour is what its names implies—flour made from the whole wheat.

Put these on your list of preferred goods.

DO YOU HAVE { A Delivery Wagon? A Telephone? A Cash Register?

These are secondary considerations nowadays. The essential thing is MODERN FIXTURES—to display and sell goods. You cannot have this without

Walker Bins

A catalog telling all about them will be mailed on request.

WALKER PATENT PIVOTED BIN CO.
24 South Seventh Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

"As Good as the 'J. M.'"

No delivery wagon built is as good as the "J. M.," though many are said to be. The makers of other wagons do the best they can, but they haven't our facilities.

The "J. M." wagon is the handsomest, longest-lived delivery wagon on the market. No other wagon manufacturer we ever knew rejected everything but second-growth hickory for wheels, as we do.

Benzoate of Soda Temporarily Legitimized

Latest Decision by United States Department of Agriculture Is That No Prosecutions Will at Present Be Brought Against Its Moderate Use. Use of Sulphur Dioxid in Dried Fruits, Molasses, etc., Also Permitted. Status of Color In Canned Vegetables.

The United States Department of Agriculture, for the time being at least, has legitimized the use of benzoate of soda as a food preservative and the use of sulphur dioxid as a bleach. Benzoate is very largely used to preserve such products as catsups, jams, mincemeat, etc. Sulphur dioxid is universally used to bleach dried fruits and molasses, and up to a few months ago was used to bleach glucose white.

During the last few days the department has promulgated a decision which, while it does not declare the use of the above substances legal, takes them out from under the ban by announcing that no prosecutions will for the present be brought against their moderate use. This decision will bring the greatest relief to all concerned.

The text of the decision is as follows:—

Food Inspection Decision 76.—Dyes, chemicals and preservatives in foods.

It is provided in Regulation 15 of the rules and regulations for the enforcement of the Food and Drugs Act that the Secretary of Agriculture shall determine by chemical or other examination those substances which are permitted or inhibited in food products; that he shall determine from time to time the principles which shall guide the use of colors, preservatives and other substances added to foods, and that when these findings and determinations of the Secretary of Agriculture are approved by the Secretary of the Treasury and the Secretary of Commerce and Labor the principles so established shall become a part of the rules and regulations for the enforcement of the Food and Drugs Act.

The law provides that no food or food product intended for interstate commerce nor any food or food product manufactured or sold in the District of Columbia or in any territory of the United States or for foreign commerce except as thereinafter provided, shall contain substances which lessen the wholesomeness or which add any deleterious properties thereto. It has been determined that no drug, chemical or harmful or deleterious dye or preservative may be used. Common salt, sugar, wood smoke, potable distilled liquors, vinegar and condiments may be used. Pending further investigation the use of saltpeter is allowed.

Pending the investigation of the conditions attending processes of manufacture and the effects upon health of the combinations mentioned in this paragraph, the Department of Agriculture will institute no prosecution in the case of the application of fumes of burning sulphur (sulphur dioxid), as usually employed in the manufacture of those foods and food products which contain acetaldehyde sugars, etc., with which sulphurous acid may combine, if the total amount of sulphur dioxid in the finished product does not exceed 350 milligrams per liter in wines, or 350 milligrams per kilogram in other food products, of which not over 70 milligrams is in a free state.

No prosecutions will be based on the manufacture, sale or transportation of foods and food products manufactured or packed during the season of 1907 which contain sodium benzoate in quantities not exceeding one-tenth of one per cent. or benzoic acid equivalent thereto, provided sodium benzoate or benzoic acid has hitherto been generally used in such foods and food products.

The label of each package of sulphured foods, or foods containing sodium benzoate, or benzoic acid, shall be a statement that the food is preserved with sulphur dioxid, or with sodium benzoate, or benzoic acid, as the case may be, and the label must not bear a serial number assigned to any guarantee filed with the Department of Agriculture nor any statement that the article is guaranteed to conform to the Food and Drugs Act.

The use of any dye, harmless or otherwise, to color or stain a food in a manner whereby damage or inferiority is concealed, is specifically prohibited by law. The use in food for any purpose of any mineral dye or any coal-tar dye, except those coal-tar dyes hereinafter listed, will be grounds for prosecution. Pending further investigations now under way and the announcement thereof, the coal-tar dyes hereinafter named, made specifically for use in foods, and which bear a guarantee from the manufacturer that they are free from subsidiary products and represent the actual substance, the name of which they bear, may be used in foods. In every case a certificate that the dye in question has been tested by competent experts and found to be free from harmful constituents must be filed with the Secretary of Agriculture and approved by him.

The following coal-tar dyes which may be used in this manner are given numbers, the numbers preceding the names referring to the number of the dye in question as listed in A. G. Green's edition of the Schultz-Julius Systematic Survey of the Organic Coloring Matters, published in 1904.

The list is as follows:—

Red Shades—107, Amaranth; 56, Ponceau 3 R.; 517, Erythrosin.

Orange Shade—85, Orange 1.

Yellow Shade—4, Napthol Yellow S.

Green Shade—435, Light Green, S. F. Yellowish.

Blue Shade—692, Indigo Disulfoacid.

Each of these colors shall be free from any coloring matter other than the one specified and shall not contain any contamination due to imperfect or incomplete manufacture.

The question of the entry into the United States of vegetables greened with copper salts has not been finally determined. Pending the determination and decision of this matter by the Secretary of Agriculture all vegetables greened with copper salts which do not contain an excessive amount of copper will be admitted to entry if the label bears a statement that sulphite of copper or other copper salts have been used.

This food inspection decision is to be construed in connection with Regulations 14 and 31 of the rules and regulations for the enforcement of the Food and Drugs Act. Regulation 14 provides that poisonous and deleterious preservatives shall only be applied externally and the preservatives in food products shall be of a character which shall not permit the permeation of any preservative to the interior or any portion of the interior of the product. It further provides that the preservative must be of such a character that, until removed, the food products are inedible, and that when these products are ready for consumption if any portion of the added preservative shall have penetrated the food product, the said food product shall then be subject to the regulations for food products in general.

Regulation 31 provides that food products intended for export may contain added substances not permitted in food intended for interstate commerce, when the addition of such substances does not conflict with the laws of the country to which the food products are to be exported, and when such substances are added in accordance with the direction of the foreign purchaser or his agent.

No prosecution will be based on the sale of foods and food products manufactured or packed in the United States prior to the issuing of this decision, where the composition of such foods and food products is at variance with the requirements of this decision if the nature of the variation be plainly stated on the label. In every case, however, the burden of proof will be on the manufacturer to show that the goods were manufactured or packed prior to the date of this decision.

California Aroused Over Dried Fruit Bleaching.

If the dried fruit interests of California have their way the Federal food law will never be enforced against the practice of bleaching fruit with sulphur. The Governor of the State sent President Roosevelt the following telegram last week:—

President Roosevelt, Oyster Bay:—
Am informed that Secretary of Agriculture has signed an order concerning use of sulphur in food products, which, if no exception is made to our dried fruit industry, will inflict great loss to California. Order is now waiting the signatures of Secretary of Treasury and of Secretary of Commerce and Labor. Our State wants to be heard before order is finally signed. Can it be so arranged?

J. N. Gillett,
Governor of California.

The Secretary of Agriculture, answering, intimated that the California fruit interests need not be alarmed.

How Maple and Cane Syrup Must Be Labeled.

Federal Food Law Enforcing Board Issues Regulations on Subject. Depends on the Proportion of Ingredients.

The Federal Food Law Enforcing Board has issued a decision during the week (No. 75) as to the labeling of syrup consisting of a mixture of maple and cane. The text is as follows:—

THE LABELING OF MIXTURES OF CANE AND MAPLE SYRUPS.

The director of the agricultural experiment station at Orono, Me., in a recent letter made the following statement:—

> There are in Maine many syrups which are labeled something like this: "A Fancy Quality Syrup Made from Pure Maple and White Sugar." Many of these syrups carry but little maple, one company saying that in a syrup analogous to this they put 90 per cent. of cane sugar and 10 per cent. of maple.

When both maple and cane sugars are used in the production of syrup the label should be varied according to the relative proportion of the ingredients. The name of the sugar present in excess of 50 per cent. of the total sugar content should be given the greater prominence on the label; that is, it should be given first. For example, a syrup the sugars of which consist of 51 per cent. cane sugar and 49 per cent. maple sugar would be properly branded as "Syrup Made from Cane and Maple Sugar," or as "Cane and Maple Syrup. The terms "maple sugar" and "maple syrup" may only be used on the label as part of the name when those substances are present in substantial quantities as ingredients. They should not appear on the label as part of the name when only a small quantity of those substances is used to give a maple flavor to the product. A cane syrup containing only enough maple syrup or maple sugar to give a maple flavor is properly labeled as "Cane Syrup, Maple Flavor" or "Cane Syrup Flavored with Maple."

Whenever it is necessary to declare cane sugar (sucrose) on a label it should be declared as cane sugar and not as white sugar.

How Any Grocer Can Preserve Eggs

In Response to Numerous Requests, "Grocery World" Secures From Agricultural Department Description of Process of Preserving Eggs With Water Glass. Process Cheap, Simple and Wonderfully Effective.

In a recent issue the "Grocery World" published the results of some of the Federal Government's investigation into the preservation of eggs by the use of water glass (sodium silicate). In that article no details were given of the process; only of the results. Inasmuch as the whole subject is one of immense interest to retail grocers, this journal has received quite a number of requests, since the publication of the former article, for detailed directions how water glass is used. To secure this we have gone to headquarters, the Department of Agriculture at Washington, and have secured there a full description of the process, by following which any person of ordinary intelligence may preserve eggs with the preparation named.

Water glass or soluble glass is the popular name for potassium silicate or for sodium silicate, the commercial article often being a mixture of the two. The commercial water glass is used for preserving eggs, as it is much cheaper than the chemically pure article which is required for many scientific purposes. Water glass is commonly sold in two forms, a syrup-thick liquid of about the consistency of molasses, and a powder. The thick syrup, the form perhaps most usually seen, is sometimes sold wholesale as low as 1.75 cents per pound in carboy lots. The retail price varies, though 10 cents per pound seems to be the price commonly asked. A solution of the desired strength for preserving eggs may be made by dissolving one part of the syrup-thick water glass in ten parts, by measure, of water. If the water-glass powder is used, less is required for a given quantity of water. Much of the water glass offered for sale is very alkaline. Such material should not be used, as the eggs preserved in it will not keep well. Any druggist will test it as to alkalinity with litmus paper. Only pure water should be used in making the solution, and it is best to boil it and cool it before mixing with the water glass. The solution should be carefully poured over the eggs packed in a suitable vessel, which must be clean and sweet, and if wooden kegs or barrels are used they should be thoroughly scalded before packing the eggs in them. The packed eggs should be stored in a cool place. If they are placed where it is too warm silicate deposits on the shell and the eggs do not keep well. Only clean eggs should be packed, but it is best not to wash the eggs before packing, as this removes the natural mucilaginous coating on the outside of the shell. One gallon of the water glass will make sufficient solution for fifty dozen eggs if they are properly packed.

The "Grocery World" sees no reason why any retail grocer should not make the experiment of preserving a few eggs this summer and carrying them over until fall. If the process will bear out all of the Government's representations concerning it, there is unquestionably a wonderful future for it.

Another Adulterated Food Fake Shown Up.

Newspaper Dispatch Laid Case of Wholesale Poisoning to Effect of Acid of Tomato Upon Tin Can. Attending Physician Writes the "Grocery World" That It Was Ordinary Case of Eating Spoiled Fruit.

The "Grocery World" herewith exposes another newspaper adulterated food fake. Several days ago the following appeared in the Philadelphia "Ledger":—

POISONED BY TOMATOES.

CANNED VEGETABLES PROVED UNWHOLESOME TO FAMILY.

(Special Telegram to "Public Ledger.")

VINELAND, July 2.—Dr. George Cunningham is trying to restore to health the wife and three daughters of Davis Cohen, who were poisoned by canned tomatoes. The father and baby escaped severe sickness by not partaking of the vegetables, purchased from a nearby grocery. It is said packers will this year use a tin can that has been lacquered on the inside so that the acid will have no effect on the tin.

The whole trend of the above is to make the effect of the acid

The "Grocery World,"
Philadelphia.

Gentlemen:—Yours received. I have not seen the article quoted from in regard to tomato poisoning and do not know what the reporter said. It was not convenient to get all the facts before, so could not answer.

The Cohens bought, opened and immediately served for supper a can of "Golden Rule" tomatoes, packed by Carmine & Sherman, Thompson's Station, Md., and were made violently sick—father and one child not eating any, escaped. The tomatoes were very sour, and they had to sweeten them for eating. The can was not lacquered, nor was the tin eaten from the iron; the lid did not bulge. It seemed to me like an ordinary case of eating spoiled fruit.

Yours truly,
G. CUNNINGHAM.

Retailer Chief Sufferer by Coffee Market Manipulation

Well-known Coffee Authority Shows That Present Brazilian Scheme to Inflate Price of Rio and Santos Chiefly Harms the Retail Grocer. Retailers the Victims of All Such Coffee Schemes. Can Block Them by Simply Buying Wants.

A review of the various manipulations from year to year in the Rio and Santos coffee market since 1901 will show conclusively that the retail distributer of coffees has in every case been the chief sufferer. With the exception of the low-grade bulk coffee and the standard cheap package coffees, the retailer has lost in profits just what the speculator and manipulator has made, and, strange to say, the retailer has been the direct means of robbing himself.

The standard prices at retail for coffees have been 20, 25, 30, 35 cents. During this period the price of green coffee has varied about 4 cents per pound, while the prices mentioned above (the standard price at retail) have not varied. Five times in the last six years have the manipulators succeeded in scaring the retailers into carrying large stocks of coffee, only to drop the price when the distributers' carrying capacity was reached. The gamblers in coffee are now trying to pull off the same trick, the scheme varying only in the fact that they have the cards better stacked and the dice more scientifically loaded. With the help of the Brazilian Government, they have practically withdrawn from the market about 8,000,000 bags of coffee, thereby artificially decreasing the present enormous world's visible supply, about that many bags of coffee. This coffee must eventually be sold, and during the period in which it is held its cost is steadily increasing by just the amount of the carrying charges, storage, interest, etc. By the help of a practically subsidized trade press, they are striving to create an impression that the prospect of the growing crops for years to come is very poor.

How much these statements are worth is shown by the fact that when a gentleman by the name of Hertz, from Havre, arrived in New York last year and said that after visiting the growing districts of Brazil he believed "The Best is the cheapest in the end," is an old but true saying. The women who have compared FELS-NAPTHA soap with others have concluded that this statement is true. Why not get your wife to try FELS-NAPTHA?

Why not make a display of the empty cartons on your shelves and in your windows, as well as in other blank spaces in your store? It pays to have a bright and cheerful store. Trade is attracted.

the crop of the year just passed would be 14,000,000, these gentlemen poked all manner of ridicule at the figures. As a matter of fact, the crop turned out 19,600,000.

While these gentlemen have an enormous amount of money, the surplus that they have removed from the available supply must eventually be reckoned with. Should the retailer refuse to carry any burden of the stock and keep his purchases down to a hand-to-mouth basis, the beautiful speculative edifice that these gentlemen have erected will tumble to pieces. On the contrary, should they be able (by means of their publicity bureau) to scare the distributer into helping them carry this burden by means of liberal purchases, their scheme will prove successful and their profits come directly from the retailer. They have succeeded during the last week by manipulation on the Exchange in forcing the price of actual coffee up about ⅜ cent per pound. One of the most influential trade papers in America has deliberately colored its daily reports so flagrantly that even a poorly posted merchant can readily see that the report is subsidized. If the market should advance 10 points this paper indulges in what might be termed a "bull" frenzy, and should it decline 10 points it has a wealth of explanations as to why this happened, always ending up its report by saying that the market is in a particularly healthy condition.

There is one thing positively certain, and that is, the jobbers and roasters of coffee will continue to carry only a normal stock, provided their customers, the retailers, continue to purchase only their needs, so that it is practically up to the retailer as to whether or not he shall lose the profits which legitimately should come to him. The distributer (should he use ordinary judgment) will prove the rock on which this whole scheme will come to a disastrous wreck. Should he allow himself (as he has in the past) to be cajoled into anticipating his wants he will simply add some millions of dollars to the plunder of several gentlemen who are already multi-millionares.

Northwest to Hold Mammoth Food Show.

Eastern Food Manufacturers to Be Asked to Support Food Exposition of Various Retailers' Associations to Be Held at Spokane, Wash., Next November.

Special correspondence of "Grocery World."

Spokane, Washington,
July 15, 1907.

Manufacturers of pure food products all over the United States will be invited to make displays and demonstrations at the mammoth show planned by the Spokane Retail Grocers' Association, the Inland Empire Retail Dealers' Association and the 150,000 Club of Spokane in Spokane the second and third weeks in November. The associations embrace a territory of 150,000 square miles in eastern Washington and Oregon, northern Idaho, western Montana and southeastern British Columbia, and it is predicted that the show will be the biggest success of any of its kind ever presented in the Pacific Northwest.

The grocers have entered into a contract with J. W. Dean, of Detroit, to put on the show, and in addition to his presentation there will be displays by Spokane manufacturers, as well as those in various parts of the Inland Empire. The grocers will be represented on the Joint Committee by E. N. Cory, Thomas A. Gallagher and B. A. Smith; the 150,000 Club by F. W. King, president, and Fred. H. Gaston, secretary; while the retail dealers will have G. H. Hinke, chairman; Secretary Carbary and several other members. It is likely the show will take place in Spokane's State armory, recently completed at a cost of $100,000.

The Benzoate of Soda Ruling.

The ruling by the Federal Food Law Enforcing Board, that benzoate of soda may be temporarily used as a food preservative in any quantity not exceeding 1-10 of 1 per cent., will inspire a huge sigh of relief from manufacturers all over the country. Prior to this ruling benzoate of soda was one of the very few mooted phases of the food question. This ruling for the time being legitimizes it absolutely, not only under the Federal food law, but also under the new Pennsylvania State food law, for under the provisions of the latter act no prosecution can lie in cases where the Federal law has been complied with.

In some quarters this official permission to use benzoate of soda will be taken as an act of charity toward manufacturers. The "Grocery World" estimates it is merely making a virtue of necessity. For the writer has contended ever since the passage of the act of June 30, 1906, that under the liberal provision thereof no prosecution for the use of benzoate in normal quantities could successfully lie. This was for the reason that in order to convict the Government must prove that 1-10 of 1 per cent. of benzoate is harmful, which could not be proven, since it is not the fact. Dr. Wiley, who dominates the Board of Enforcement, was unquestionably shrewd enough to see this, and the new ruling is doubtless his clever way of generously permitting something which he could not legally forbid.

Though he desired to forbid it very sorely.

There is one part of the decision bearing on this point in which the department attempts to let itself down easy. The following paragraph is referred to:—

> The label of each package of sulphured foods, or foods containing sodium benzoate, or benzoic acid, shall bear a statement that the food is preserved with sulphur dioxide, or with sodium benzoate or benzoic acid, as the case may be, and the label must not bear a serial number assigned to any guarantee filed with the Department of Agriculture nor any statement that the article is guaranteed to conform to the Food and Drugs Act.

This ties a string to the benzoate and sulphur concession which practically destroys its entire advantage. Under this restriction a man may use benzoate or sulphur but must not guarantee goods containing either. Such a regulation, however, cannot stand for one minute. In the first place no outsider, not even the United States Government, has the right to forbid a man to guarantee his product. That is wholly a personal matter with him. Every individual has the unimpeachable right to guarantee anything he makes or sells, always admitting his responsibility if the guarantee is fraudulent.

So that when the Department of Agriculture says to manufacturers "you must not guarantee your goods if they contain benzoate of soda or sulphur," it goes outside of its powers—very far outside. Manufacturers can do precisely as they like.

Its utter inconsistency would void such a regulation anyway. The substances under discussion are either legal or illegal. There is no middle class; they must be lawful or unlawful. If they are unlawful they must not be used, and the department has no right to permit their use. If they are lawful, as the "Grocery World" has claimed from the beginning, then the department has no right to restrict their use in this or any other way, and goods containing them may be guaranteed to comply with the law, because they do comply with it.

From the beginning the "Grocery World" has had no doubt that the moderate use of benzoate of soda was legal, and that goods containing it could therefore be guaranteed absolutely. It holds to precisely the same opinion still.

The Science of Food Adulteration.

No other man so well as the drug or food chemist has so clear an insight into the astounding extent to which the science of food adulteration has progressed in recent years; progressed to the point where probably half of all foods and drinks can be chemically simulated so precisely that none but an expert can detect it. Take, for example, the following formula, which produces an artificial essence of cherry:—

ESSENCE OF CHERRY.

Acetic ether	75 parts.
Benzoic ether	75 parts.
Oenanthic ether	15 parts.
Oil bitter almonds	30 parts.
Saturated alcoholic solution benzoic acid	15 parts.
Glycerine	45 parts.
Alcohol, q. s. to make	1,000 parts.

The writer had the proud privilege of sampling this product a few days ago and would have sworn, had he not known, that he was drinking cherry juice. The natural cherry flavor and tang were there, the color was there, being also artificial, and the drink was thoroughly satisfactory in every way. Yet it did not contain an atom of real cherry essence, and was an imitation and a fraud to the last drop.

This is a good type of the resources of chemistry in the matter of food sophistication. In the light of such evidence the protection of the food laws seems indeed beneficent.

American Groceries in Chinese Stores.

United States Consul Makes List of Foreign Canned and Carton Goods He Saw In an Oriental Grocery Store. Japan Beats Us On Matches. We Have Recovered Our Brazilian Flour Trade. Nova Scotia Mackerel Late.

Special correspondence of "Grocery World."

Washington, D. C.,
July 18, 1907.

In a large Nankin retail store a United States Consul jotted down the names of some of the foreign canned and packed goods displayed as follows: Condensed milk, seven brands; evaporated cream; oysters, two brands; red salmon, two brands; deviled ham; meats, four brands; fruits, two brands; buckwheat flour; pears, grapes, sweet corn, etc.; rolled oats; meat juices; maple syrup; cocoa essence and chocolates; biscuits and wafers; shredded cocoanut; California figs; apple butter, cranberry sauce, etc.; malted milk; confectioneries; cigarettes, five brands, etc.

In the same district of China the number of boxes of matches entered last year was 183,780, or four times the amount entered in 1903. These all came from Japan. It would seem impossible for any country to compete with Japan, says the Consul for that district, unless entirely new methods are used. In a Japanese match box 2⅜ by 1½ inches are 130 matches. In American and English boxes twice the size and cost of the Japanese boxes there are not half as many, although the Japanese matches are better to light a fire, candle, lamp, cigar, cigarette or pipe. With the increased sales of tobacco the match trade increases. In some Chinese shops the best brands of American toilet soaps can be bought.

Another feature of the export trade in food products is that the manufacturers of this country have largely recovered the lard and flour trade of Brazil. The United States had all but lost the market, on account of the competition of Argentine flour, the development of the home milling industry, and, largely, the disastrous freight charges, and other causes. The imports of American lard in 1906 amounted to 6,704 cases and 33,890 barrels, against 151 cases and 5,124 barrels in 1905. The total imports of flour into Rio de Janeiro in 1905 and 1906 were 320,074 and 214,609 barrels, respectively. While the imports of Argentine flour fell off from 306,525 barrels in 1905 to 194,600 barrels in 1906, the imports of the American product increased from 13,549 barrels in 1905 to 20,009 barrels in 1906.

The milling business of Brazil is controlled entirely by an English syndicate, which, at its last meeting in London, expressed its positive determination to drive American flour out of the Brazilian market. The 20 per cent. preferential tariff in favor of Writing from Halifax, Consul-General Holloway sends these particulars of the unexpected appearance of the mackerel late in the season: "The fishing on the Nova Scotia coast this year has been exceedingly backward, and the mackerel so late that the fishermen had about given up all hope of their appearance. Early in the season some small catches were made at Yarmouth and Prospect, but up to yesterday the big schools of fish had not made their appearance. But Providence has at last favored the fishermen of the western shore of Nova Scotia, and yesterday big catches of mackerel were made at several points along the coast. It is estimated that the aggregate catch will total over 1,000 barrels."

Two-Minute Sermons for the Retail Grocer

II.—Don't Mistake Ingenuity for Laziness.

The man who tries to make his work easier is not generally a lazy man.

Too many business men are today inclined to look with suspicion on anyone in their employ who tries to so simplify his work as to be able to do it in less time. A man who goes to his employer and outlines a plan whereby he can do the same amount of work in less time is generally about as likely to get a cool reception as encouragement. Why this is the case is hard to say. In most cases it probably comes from the fact that the employer is not himself familiar with the work, and naturally feels that an employee is more likely to try to shirk than to accomplish more.

This is entirely the wrong view to take of the matter. When an employee takes enough interest in your business to devise plans of saving time for you, he is too valuable a man for you to overlook. He is not trying to save his time for his own use, but for yours. He realizes that you are paying him for a full day's work, and if he studies out a method of saving an hour of his time each day, or even a few moments, he knows he will be expected to find something else to do during that time.

This is the kind of a man to encourage. Every idea he advances should be taken under consideration, and if found to be sound they can be given a trial. Each trial will encourage him to be more valuable to you, and what do you hire men for, if not to help you.

The lazy man is more like the machine. He plods through routine work and never tries to think of better ways of doing it. If he can get more assistance by a little shirking he is more likely to shirk. If he has any thoughts which would benefit you, he is averse to letting you find it out. Do not get these two classes of employees mixed in your mind, for if you do, you fail to get what you should.

New Illinois Food Law in Effect.

The new Illinois food law, which was modeled on the Federal food and drugs act, became effective July 1st. It provides for the appointment by the Governor of a State Food Commissioner and the establishment of a State Food Department. The new law also provides for an assistant commissioner and a number of chemists and inspectors to work in conjunction with the State Food Commissioner. The Governor shall appoint, from time to time, as required, a Food Standards Commission, for the purpose of determining or establishing standards of purity, quality or strength for food products for the State of Illinois, to consist of three members, one of whom shall be the State Food Commissioner, or his representative, one a representative of the Illinois food manufacturing industries, and one an expert food chemist of known reputation, all to be citizens of the State of Illinois.

The New York Letter

Tobacco Trust Owns Part of Acker, Merrall & Condit Co. Holds Nearly One-fifth of Its Five Million Stock. Discussion of New Benzoate Decision. Renaissance of Food for Stomach Instead of Eye. Small News of New York Market.

Special correspondence of "Grocery World."

New York, July 18, 1907.

In the suit brought by the Government against the American Tobacco Co., the complaint contains an allegation that the trust owns $900,000 of the $5,000,000 of common stock of the Acker, Merrall & Condit Co., which has a chain of high-grade grocery stores in this city. The allegation is made in support of the contention that the trust has been reaching out to get control of various seemingly independent enterprises for the purpose of smothering competition.

The members of the grocery company are reticent on the subject. Your correspondent to-day saw David Merrall at the company's downtown store. "I am a silent man," said Mr. Merrall, with a good-natured smile, but the good nature did not extend into making any remarks on the subject of the suit. Others connected with the company also have nothing to say at present.

United States Attorney Stimson is associated in the proceeding with James McReynolds, as special counsel, and the latter drew the complaint, which is a voluminous document of upward of 100 printed pages. The grocery company is brought into the matter only incidentally. In a paragraph, marshalling facts as to the tobacco company's operations in controlling various enterprises, the assertion about the ownership of the stock in the grocery company is made. No details as to the relations between the tobacco and the grocery companies are given.

At the office of Mr. McReynolds it was said that the information as to the ownership of the stock had been received from sources believed to be reliable, and so this fact had been used as a part of the case.

The common supposition of people who are pretty well posted on grocery affairs in this city has been that the tobacco company owns a larger proportion of the grocery company's stock than is indicated in the Government's complaint. It has sometimes been said that the tobacco company practically controls the grocery business, but naturally outsiders can have no accurate information as to this. The personnel of the members of the grocery company, one or more of whom had large tobacco interests before the formation of the trust, is of course indicative of close business relations. It was at the time when a well-known brand of cigars (Cremos) was being pushed with great vigor that the friendship of the grocery and tobacco companies was first made somewhat public. The stores of the grocery company all have prominent tobacco departments selling the trust products. On the other hand, one or two competing grocery companies which formerly sold trust goods have sold none for several years.

It cannot be learned that anybody in particular claims to have been injured by the close relations of the two companies. It is supposed that possible competitors of Acker, Merrall & Condit in tobacco products could not get the trust goods, and, on the other hand, the grocery company sold these goods chiefly, if not altogether. The tobacco stand in the ordinary grocery store in this city is not much of a factor. If there has been complaining, it is likely that it has been done by the owners of independent cigar stands and stores. It is not denied that there have been abundant supplies of cigars and tobacco made by independent companies, and a large tobacco dealer remarked that in imported cigars the independents have been getting the big end of the business for several years.

Retailers seem more interested in the order to omit the guarantee serial numbers than in any other part of the Federal decision as to the use of benzoate of soda and sulphur dioxid. Several prominent retailers, with whom your correspondent spoke, said that the order to omit the serial numbers was a blunder. For years the burden when there was trouble with the food products was borne by the retailers. They especially appreciated the feature of the new law under which the responsibility, by means of the guarantee, was properly placed on the manufacturers.

The plan to omit serial numbers on products containing benzoate or sulphur seemed to the retailers who talked about it as likely to give the manufacturers a loophole to escape responsibility. It was suggested, however, that the authorities probably have a system so arranged that responsibility will be just as definite as when the numbers are used. It is pointed out that in these products, which the Government is still investigating, there is, because of the doubt or suspicion, all the greater need for having the manufacturer bear the burden. The concession to benzoate of soda, as well as to certain artificial coloring substances, it is understood, is strictly limited as yet to the 1907 pack, with no promise as to what will be done after this year.

An era of food for the palate and stomach, rather than the eye, is beginning, according to some of the talk that is heard in and out of the trade. The public, it is predicted, will get more and more intolerant of any articles with anything added that does not seem to belong in them. It is pointed out that already there is a great market for articles that are guaranteed to be entirely free from extraneous substances, and the makers of such food will naturally claim that even harmless coloring is at least deceptive and intended to conceal the quality of inferior food.

Home canned products and food suggestive of old-fashioned methods in the preparation are displayed quite attractively in many stores that formerly made no feature of this kind, and this is an indication of the popular tendency.

The H-O Co., of Buffalo, is to be taken over by a new corporation, the Edward Ellsworth Co., of Buffalo, which has an authorized capital of $2,000,000. The capital stock of the old company, of which Edward Ellsworth was president, was $500,000. Under the certificate of incorporation of the new company it may manufacture cereals and all forms of grain and food products, and operate mills and elevators. The new directors are Thomas D. Powell, Almon W. Lytle, Leo A. Weter, Hugh J. Rourke, Walter Minchan, Horace L. Mann and William G. Heimlich, all of Buffalo.

Spanish olive oil is being adulterated with linseed or seesame oil, but only for the cheaper home consumption, says a Consular report from Barcelona. A large dealer here said that comparatively little olive oil from Spain is consumed in this country, and he believed that none of the adulterated oil, about which there is trouble in Spain, is coming here.

Preston & Davis, Brooklyn oil dealers, were again in court yesterday and renewed the charge that the Standard Oil Co. is trying to drive them out of the business in which they have been engaged for many years. The present argument is on an application made by the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad for a temporary injunction restraining the Interstate Commerce Commission from enforcing an order which it recently issued. This order compels the railroad to deliver oil cars to Preston & Davis as it formerly did. The firm alleges that after it had withstood various other attacks of the Standard, the latter company, last fall, made a secret arrangement with the railroad company, as a result of which no more deliveries of oil cars were made to the complainants. Judge Lacombe, in the United States Circuit Court, reserved decision on the railroad's application for an injunction.

That the Butter Committee of the New York Mercantile Exchange has been in the habit of deliberately and systematically issuing quotations on the wholesale price of butter which were untrue in a vast majority of instances, was a decision given by Justice Jaycox in Brooklyn, on Thursday last. The Justice declared that this action was willful and fraudulent, and he issued an order restraining the Exchange from issuing quotations at other than the selling values commonly obtainable. This decision was the result of an action brought by produce dealers, who alleged that the officers of the Exchange were in the habit of manipulating the quotations on butter for speculative purposes.

It has been definitely decided to conduct a convention excursion, leaving New York, Sunday, August 4th, at 9.30 A. M. for Elmira, where the New York State Association will hold its seventh annual session August 5th to 8th, a food show being a feature. As the food show will be opened July 29th, it will be at its best while the convention is in session. The presidents of nearly all of the branch associations in the cities of the State, besides others prominent in the retail trade, including National Secretary John A. Green, will speak at the convention.

A New Move

And an important one to grocers. There is scarcely a grocer or consumer within twenty-five miles of Philadelphia who does not know of Freihofer's Bread, Pie and Cakes. They have attained their unprecedented popularity solely on merit. We are now manufacturing Macaroni and Noodles. These goods we make like our other goods, of the finest materials money can buy.

The goods are not colored artificially, they get their rich yellow from the entire egg. They not only conform to the Pure Food Laws, but are so much better than the law requires, that you can bank on making and keeping trade with them.

Do You Know Why the Department Stores Do So Much Business?

It's because they attract people to their stores. The most effective method of doing this is by attractively decorated windows, made bright as day by electricity. Grocers take a leaf from the Department Store's book—dress your windows invitingly; put signs in them calling attention to bargains and light the displays so that passers-by can't help seeing them. You will bring enough new customers into your store in a day to pay the cost for a month.

While your store is closed and you are off duty, make your windows win new trade for you—a representative will call and show you how it can be done and what it will cost if you will drop a card or phone.

Hams That Always Sell

There is another sort of ham much less preferred to the absolutely unidentified and unbranded ham, and that is the ham of the packer who gets good raw material to-day and poor to-morrow.

Both of these kill the grocers' trade, because they are so irregular. They please his customers to-day and provoke them to-morrow. No trade can last long under hot and cold applications.

Swift's PREMIUM Hams are always regular. We have the pick of the hogs of the whole country and hence we can keep the quality even the whole year through. Swift's PREMIUM Hams hold and increase trade.

Window-Dressing Articles Wanted

For several months the "Grocery World" has been looking for the right man to take charge of its "Window-Dressing Department" and contribute a good, suggestive weekly article. We have tried several, but none was exactly what was wanted.

We will now attempt to get these articles from our subscribers, probably every one of whom has some technical knowledge of window-dressing. What we want is articles clearly describing window displays that can be made by the average retailer; not necessarily new or original—in fact, those which have been used successfully are perhaps preferable to all others.

For all acceptable articles, the "Grocery World" will pay an average price of $5 each. All matter sent in under this arrangement should be addressed to the "Window-Dressing Department." If drawings are also sent they should be made throughout in black ink (not pencil).

THE GROCERY MARKETS

Tea.

The tea market is in fair condition. There have been no changes of any character during the past week. Prices are steady to firm and the demand fair. No important changes are looked for in the near future.

Coffee.

The market for Rio and Santos coffee has fluctuated some little during the past week, and nets at the close of the week a slight advance. The general conditions are about steady. Trade in options is extremely small, owing to most operators' complete distrust of the market. Actual coffee conditions will follow options very closely. The consumptive demand for Brazil coffees is about normal for the season. Mild coffees are steady and unchanged. Mochas show a slight decline. Javas are firm and show a constantly hardening tone.

Sugar.

The raw sugar market has shown a slight upward reaction during the week, with the prospect of slight advance. The price had reached too low a level. Refined sugar is unchanged, and gives no indication of any further advance for the time being. The demand is excellent.

Syrup and Molasses.

Glucose is unchanged for the week. Compound syrup is unchanged in price and very dull. Sugar syrup is wanted to some extent at ruling prices. Molasses is steady and dull.

Fish.

The demand for fish, speaking particularly of mackerel, is very fair. The supply of new shore mackerel is still inadequate for the demand. The quality is improving and as it does the price advances. Some new Norways are coming forward, but scarcely enough to make a market. Cod, hake and haddock rule at steady prices, but the demand is light. Salmon is fairly active at ruling prices. The sales of future sockeye have been very large, though no prices have been named as yet. Sardines, both imported and domestic, are unchanged in price, steady to firm, and in fair demand.

Canned Goods.

Tomatoes are unchanged, both spot and future. For spot goods the range is 90 to 95 cents county, the situation being considerably unsettled. Futures range from 85 to 87½ cents county. The demand for tomatoes is light and the situation none too strong. Corn is very dull without change in price. Peas are steady and healthy. The Maryland pack, which is over, was 25 to 30 per cent. short. The New York outlook is only fair, but Wisconsin and Michigan expect to pack a normal amount. The pack everywhere is running to small sizes. Apples show an advance of 10 cents per dozen on New York State gallons, a few Pennsylvania gallons being offered at $2.65. Peaches are quiet, but firm. One or two Baltimore packers have named very high prices, but no business has been done. The California Fruit Canners' Association, as reported elsewhere, has at last named new prices on the 1907 pack, mostly on a basis 50 cents per dozen above last year. The Baltimore line of small canned goods is about unchanged. The demand is light.

Dried Fruits.

Prunes have stiffened up very slightly during the past week, due to discouraging reports from the coast as to crop conditions. There has been no actual change in price, however. The demand is very light. It seems to be generally believed that this year's sale of future prunes was much below the average. Peaches are dull and still very high. The high prices of raisins are still maintained, but there is talk of lower prices on the coast, due to fear of the coming competition with foreign raisins. On loose raisins particularly there seems to be some reason to expect lower prices. Apricots show no relief from the scarcity and high prices. Currants are unchanged and in fair demand. Apples are firm and unchanged.

Beans and Peas.

Pea beans are dull and unchanged in price. Marrows seem gradually tending downward again, sales having been made as low as $2. The demand, however, is very light. California limas are unchanged and in moderate demand. Dried peas are firm and quiet, the sale of yellow splits being unusually large just now.

Butter.

The butter market is firm and unchanged. The receipts all clear up on arrival, as the quality of the current make is running very good considering the hot weather. The speculative as well as the consumptive demand is very good, not only in the East, but over the entire country. No radical change in prices is expected soon.

Eggs.

The market for fancy eggs is very firm and unchanged. The largest percentage of arrivals are showing the effects of the prevalent hot spell and are offered somewhat below the price of the best eggs. There is enough fancy stock, however, to keep the market from advancing. From now on, if the weather keeps hot, a falling off in the receipts may be expected, with an advance in price.

Cheese.

The cheese market remains very firm, with a large consumptive demand as well as demand for speculation. The quality of the make is running fancy and the make is about normal. The market is healthy and no change is expected in the immediate future. The receipts are kept closely cleaned up all the time.

Provisions.

The market for all grades of hams, bellies and bacon is steady and unchanged. There has been a very good demand for everything in the smoked meat line, but with plenty of stock to go round and no disposition to advance prices. Pure lard remains firm. Compound is not quite so firm, but without any change in price as yet. Barrel pork, dried beef and canned meats are all firm and unchanged and in good consumptive demand.

Produce.

New potatoes, $1.75 to $2 per barrel, demand fair; old potatoes, 25 to 30 cents per bushel, demand poor; near-by onions, 85 to 90 cents per basket, demand good; salad, 50 to 60 cents per barrel, demand fair; scullions, $1 to $1.25 per 100, demand fair; radishes, 50 cents per 100, demand poor; beets, $1.50 per 100, demand slow; rhubarb, 2 cents per bunch, demand slow; string beans, 30 to 40 cents per basket, demand fair; turnips, 50 cents per basket, demand fair to good; cucumbers, 75 to 85 cents per basket, demand fair; carrots, 2½ to 3½ cents per bunch, demand fair to good; spinach, $1 to $1.25 per barrel, demand poor.

Green Fruit.

Bananas, firsts, $1.25 to $1.75 per bunch; 8-hands, $1 to $1.25 per bunch; 7-hands, 65 to 90 cents per bunch; 6-hands, 40 to 60 cents; red, $1 to $2.50 per bunch, demand poor; limes, 80 cents to $1 per 100, demand slow; lemons, $3.50 to $5 per box, demand poor; pineapples, $2.75 to $6 per box, demand fair to good; California oranges, $4.50 to $6 per box, demand fair to good.

Nuts.

Peanuts, green, choice, 5½ cents per pound; fancy, 7 cents; jumbo, large, 8 cents; roasted, choice, $1.25 per bushel; fancy, $1.50; jumbo, large, $1.65, demand fair; Brazil nuts, 8½ cents per pound; filberts, 10½ cents; pecans, 16 cents; walnuts, marbots, 12½ cents; mixed nuts, 11½ cents, demand poor.

MARKET NOTES.

North Carolina lima beans average $4 per crate and are in limited demand. The quality is excellent.

Renewed War Against Mail Order Houses.

War has been declared on the great catalogue houses of Chicago and other cities by the 500,000 retail merchants of the West. In one of the most striking economic movements this country has ever known the small dealers are fighting, as they say, for their lives. The mammoth institutions, employing thousands of workers, doing their business entirely through the medium of their bulky catalogues, spending no money in the communities whence they derive annually millions of dollars of patronage, are forcing increasing numbers of home merchants to the wall and, so their opponents claim, are "making commercial graveyards of once prosperous towns." In this life or death struggle jobbers and manufacturers also are involved with the retail merchants. An organized attack on the catalogue institutions is to be made by the Home Trade League of America, which has existed for several months in Chicago, largely as a publicity bureau, but which is shortly to incorporate and institute a more systematic and aggressive campaign against the catalogue houses through a board of twenty-one managers, with a vice-president and an advisory committee of ten members from each State. The backbone of the league is formed of commercial associations, national, State and local in character, in Illinois, Wisconsin, Iowa, Michigan, Kansas and Minnesota. The officers of associations in scores of cities are in constant correspondence with the league, which will continue to have its national headquarters in this city. Officers of the league will be selected from the most aggressive of the leaders of these associations of business men. Alfred C. Clark is manager of the league.

Trade Kicking Against New Freight Regulation

New Classification Which Becomes Operative August 1st, Makes It Henceforth Impossible to Bunch Small Orders to a Carload and Have the Railroad Deliver Each Buyer's Share on Consignee's Order.

All of the railroads of the East have adopted a new series of rules and regulations covering the shipment of freight, which have been issued during the past week to go into effect August 1, 1907. There are few changes from the last classification, but one new clause is especially interesting and important to large shippers. It is as follows:—

> Railroad agents at forwarding points will not receive property in carloads for distribution by railroad agents to two or more parties; delivering agents will deliver property only to consignee thereof or to the party presenting consignee's written order, and will not recognize orders from consignor or consignee providing for distribution of carload shipments among various consignees or calling for split deliveries according to brands, marks, sizes or other identification of packages, nor will railroad agents at delivering points in any way act as the representative of the consignor or consignee for the distribution of carload shipments (see Note).

The note referred to is as follows:—

> NOTE.—Rule 5B will apply only when the consignor or consignee is the actual owner of the property.

Certain of the freight agents of the Pennsylvania Railroad have interpreted the above regulation in a way highly distasteful to both the wholesale and large retail trade. In the past it has been the custom for receivers of certain goods to bunch their orders, when the separate orders were for less than a carload. For example, one buyer would buy 100 cases, another fifty, and so on until a full car had been bought. The full car would then be consigned either to one of the buyers, or to the broker or commission merchant who had made the sales. When the car arrived the consignee would give each buyer who owned a share in it an order on the railroad company, and the latter, when the orders were presented, would deliver the portion of the car covered by it to the holder.

Under this new regulation the freight agents say they are forbidden to split up the car or to recognize anybody but the actual consignee. The whole car will be delivered to him, or to any person presenting his order, but it will not be split up and delivered piece meal as formerly. This is going to cause enormous inconvenience, as the small orders bunched to make a car are very many.

The meaning of the qualifying note is not understood. If it means what it seems to, a broker's orders for portions of a carload—he not being the owner—might be accepted.

Bridgeport, Conn., July 14, 1907.
Editor Advertising Department,
The "Grocery World,"
Philadelphia, Pa.

Dear Sir:—My father was formerly connected with the grocery business and while in that capacity took the "Grocery World." At that time I was much interested in your weekly department, and read same each week with much profit and pleasure. I have recently completed a course in one of the largest advertising correspondence schools in the country, and have decided to engage in the business of ad. writing as a means of earning a livelihood. My idea now is to make a specialty of grocery advertising, which in my judgment is sadly neglected. How would you advise me to go about this? What are the essentials of good grocery advertising? Is there a field for an ad. writer who would write grocery advertising alone? By advising me on these subjects you will confer a deep obligation which I will be glad to repay by contributing an article to your columns at any time you may name. I have no objection to having this letter answered through the "Grocery World," provided my name is not printed.

Respectfully yours,

The essentials of good grocery advertising are the essentials of good advertising in any other line—first having a story to tell, then telling it in an attractive and intelligent way, and finally telling it through the right mediums. Any man that will meet these three requirements will be doing good advertising, and because it is good will get results from it. Remember that all three points must be looked after. Every advertiser hasn't a story to tell; he may think he has, but it doesn't naturally follow that he really has. You must advertise what people want or are in line to want, or you have no story. What I mean is that the man who would advertise horse manure through the "Ladies' Home Journal" would be advertising something that no reader thereof could possibly want, and so would actually have no story to tell. How to tell it is another signally important point. The big department stores pay thousands of dollars every year simply for writers—men to put their advertising matter into shape. Putting the properly written story in the right sort of a medium is the third and equally important requirement. The right medium doesn't always mean a newspaper or a magazine, or any publication. It may mean a circular. A bad choice of a medium may kill the brightest advertisement of the finest and most sorely needed article. For example, advertising a phonograph in a paper read exclusively by the deaf and dumb might get a few replies, but I can't see how it could expect to get many.

Do I believe there is a field for a grocery ad-writer? That depends on what he expects to do. If he intends to study grocery advertising with an idea of taking a position with some one large grocery house, I say yes, there is unquestionably a field. If he intends to do general grocery advertising, writing ads. by mail for John Jones in Philadelphia and William Smith in Denver, then I say I do not believe there is a field. By that I do not mean that this correspondent could not get clients—the chance is that he might—but I do not believe he could do good work for them. If he did not do good work for them he could not hold them and therefore could not build up a lasting business. The advertising of the average town grocer is local or neighborhood advertising to an unusual degree, for which reason it is harder for an outsider to write than most other advertising. If this correspondent attempted to write individual ads. for each client, on data furnished by them, he would have to charge for his work more money than the average grocer would want to pay, and if he wrote stock ads. and sold them to all his clients alike, they wouldn't be worth 2 cents.

Robbers.

You fellows all owe me money. A man I know called you robbers before me one day last week and I girded up my loins and swatted him one he won't forget in a hurry.

He's a retail dealer in jewelry, cut-glass and such stuff, and has a business in fitting eye glasses on the side. His store is in a little town up the State and he has quite a trade. Making money, too, I guess.

He's an all right fellow except when he shows his ignorance like he did the other day.

I met him at the house of a mutual friend.

"You're interested in the grocery business in some way, ain't you?" he said to me, in the course of conversation.

I said I was.

"Well, I've just struck a good thing," he said. "I've got a cousin in the wholesale grocery business and I've just made an arrangement with him to let me have all my stuff at wholesale. You have no idea how much I save. My, how these retail grocers have been robbin' me!"

"Robbing you?" I said, "how robbing you?"

"Why, in the prices they've charged me," he said. "Why, in some cases I save more than half! I won't use anything but Java and Mocha coffee; I've been paying at retail 30 and 35 cents for it—never less than 30. I get the same thing now for 22 cents. Think of that—a profit of 13 cents on a pound of coffee—over fifty per cent. on cost price!

"And tea," he continued. "I been robbed worse on tea than on coffee. For English Breakfast tea I've been paying a dollar a pound. I buy it at wholesale for 40 cents! What d'ye know about that!"

I said nothing. I thought I'd let him ramble on.

"Found any more steals?" I asked.

"Lots of 'em," he replied. "Spices is another. I been a payin' 10 cents a quarter for black pepper. I don't remember just what I pay at wholesale, but I think it's about 21 cents a pound. Gee, I should think those fellows would be ashamed to look themselves in the face in the glass. Ain't that fierce, though?"

I had been told a little about the jewelry and the optical business, so I thought I saw a way to get back. I led the conversation off to other channels, and after a while got around to his business.

He said he was making money There wasn't any chance that I'd ever be a customer of his, so he got very gabby and loose-mouthed.

"The jewelry line is a mighty nice business," I said. "It's genteel and you make good money in it."

"Bet your life you make good money!" he said, swallowing the bait and half the line. "Now, take cut-glass—I sell quite a lot of cut-glass. I sold a water bottle just before I left home—take that as an example. I charged $6.50 for it; it cost me $3.35. I double my money on almost all the cut-glass I sell. And the best of it is that people pay it—there's no kicks coming.

"But the optical business!" he said, "gee, it was a great day when I got into that! That's the juiciest thing I ever got my claws on! I have a case, you know, and examine eyes as good as any doctor. Why, I get from $3 to $6 a pair for glasses that sometimes don't cost me a dollar. How's that?"

"Do you mean that you have different prices to different people for the same glasses?" I asked.

"Sure," he said, "depends on what they can afford to pay. If a man can afford to pay a good price, I put it on. If he can't, I let up on him. But I never make less than 200 per cent. on the cost," he finished.

"Think that's just a square deal?" I asked.

"Sure it is!" he replied. "I ain't in business for my health. Get all you can is my motto."

"Evidently it is when you're the man that gets it," I said, "but not when it's the grocer. You called him a robber a minute ago because he made 13 cents on a pound of 22-cent coffee and 60 cents on a pound of 40-cent tea. What about you? You make a hundred per cent. on all the cut-glass you sell and from two to five hundred per cent. on your glasses.

Besides that, the grocer is at least decent enough to 'rob' everybody alike, while you soak every man as much as he'll stand. Robber! Holy smoke, just think of your calling anybody else a robber!"

He let out a sheepish snicker and got a little red, though he had nothing to say for a minute.

Then he asked what business of mine it was how much he made.

What d'ye think of that for a peach of a hot retort?

Oh, yes, another thing he told me—he was doing about $7,500 a year. Seems small, doesn't it?

And yet on that business he cleaned up last year, after paying all expenses, $2,600!

How much would a grocer clear who did $7,500? If he pulled a thousand dollars out of it he'd be doing magnificently, and I know a whole lot who hardly make a bare living out of that much business.

Just think of that again—a net profit of $2,600 out of $7,500 business, and then remember that he called you fellows robbers for what you get.

By gad, a man who can make $2,600 out of $7,500 is more than a mere robber—he's a burglar!

This whole line is higher than last year. To be specific, the following advances are made over the opening prices last year, taking the quotation on extras; Apricots, 50 cents; cherries, 50 cents; peaches, 50 cents; Bartlett pears, 50 cents; plums, 25 cents.

Three Western Sugar Houses Combine.

The proposed consolidation of the three great sugar companies of the West has been agreed upon. The plans were laid before the Eastern stockholders of the companies concerned and a basis of consolidation agreed upon. The properties will be taken over by the new concern, which will probably be called the Utah-Idaho Sugar Co. It will have a total capitalization of $13,000,000, of which $10,000,000 will be preferred and $3,000,000 common. The outstanding stock will be called in and new issued on the following basis: Utah Sugar Co., preferred stock, $3,000,000, which is the par value of the present issue, or $10 per share. Utah Sugar Co., common stock, $3,000,000, the same as at present existing. The Idaho Sugar Co., $3,850,000, preferred stock, which is at the rate of $11 per share for the stock now outstanding. Western Idaho Sugar Co., $1,250,000, which is at the rate of $12.50 per share for the stock now outstanding. This makes an entire stock issue of $8,000,000 preferred, and $3,000,000 common stock in the new company, and the preferred stock will call for 7 per cent. cumulative dividends. The remaining $1,900,000 preferred stock will be held in the treasury for future needs. A part of it will be issued to stockholders in order to build the new factory at Payete, Idaho, during the year 1908.

Cleveland, Ohio.

The Cleveland (Ohio) Retail Grocers' Association is considerably exercised over the fact that fruits and vegetables in "slack-filled" measures seem to be coming into the Cleveland market in larger proportion than usual this season. At a meeting of grocers last week one of the merchants present asserted that he had been obliged to use three or four-quart boxes of strawberries of a 24-quart case for filling up the slack-filled boxes in many instances. Very few cases which he has purchased this year were of full measure.

Minneapolis, Minn.

Trading stamps formed the principal topic for discussion at the last meeting of the Minneapolis (Minn.) Retail Grocers' Association. President M. A. Barker, of the North Side Commercial Club, told of the hearty support which the club had received from all classes of business men on the North Side in its campaign against stamps, and urged the grocers' association to take up the campaign in other parts of the city, stating that he had no doubt that the same success would be met with.

The North Side was thoroughly canvassed and nearly 400 signatures were secured to an agreement to discontinue the use of the stamps after July 1st, only five or six retailers refusing to sign the agreement. Mr. Barker said that some grocers on the North Side had been paying as high as $50 and $60 a month to the trading stamp companies, and that the companies themselves admitted that only 40 per cent. of the stamps given out were redeemed. The amount paid to the stamp companies yearly by the grocers of the North Side had been estimated at from $15,000 to $20,000.

Mr. Barker said that the stamp companies advised merchants when they arranged to handle the stamps that they must see to it that they marked their goods high enough so that the stamps would cost them nothing, and then sent women solicitors to the residences to urge consumers to insist on getting the stamps, stating that the stamps cost the consumer nothing—the merchants paid for them.

St. Louis, Mo.

The St. Louis (Mo.) Butchers' Association has won its fight for Sunday closing. Proprietors of butchers' shops in St. Louis will henceforth be compelled to close their places of business at 9 o'clock Sunday morning or languish in jail. This was determined when the Supreme Court of the State of Missouri on Monday last passed upon the constitutionality of the law and decided that it was good law and would hold. The Master Butchers' Association has long been engaged in trying to have the law maintained and this decision is considered a sweeping victory for that body.

The Supreme Court sustains the validity of the ordinance of the city of St. Louis requiring butcher shops to remain closed after 9 o'clock on Sunday morning.

It said that the sale of meat up to 9 o'clock on Sunday is an act of necessity within the spirit and meaning of the laws on that subject and that to require the meat shops to remain closed after that hour is not in any sense class legislation. The right of the city to enact such an ordinance is pronounced unquestionably coming within its police powers.

Cantaloupes average about the same price as last week—as high as $4.50 per crate for the Californias and as low as $1 for the Southern. The California cantaloupes are very fine and are wanted.

Against Tobacco Trust Coupons.

To place a tax of 2 cents upon every coupon or other rebate-giving device presented with any sale of tobacco or any of its manufactured products is the intent of a bill to be presented to the next Congress by Representative Tawney. The tax is to be collected by stamps attached and a penalty of fine or imprisonment or both is to be provided for violation of the act. The bill is the attack of the independent tobacco men of New York City against the Trust. The coupon is recognized as the strongest card in diverting trade from the independent dealers to the United Cigar Stores Co., the retail department of the Trust. The deep-seated desire of the consumer to get something for nothing is the basis of the coupon's success. A bill similar to the Tawney Bill was introduced in the last Congress by Representative Tawney. It was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means. The independents charge Bourke Cockran with being responsible for its death there.

Window Dressing for Grocers

In this department from now on will appear each week suggestive articles regarding the proper use of the retail grocer's window. An endeavor will be made to deal with the subject practically, in other words, to show grocers how they can turn their windows into a money-making feature of their business. Subscribers are invited to make free use of the department by submitting both queries or suggestions.

Novel Meat Market Window.

By Charles M. Steele,
Assistant Advertising Manager National Cash Register Co.

It is hard to display meats in summer unless you have a refrigerator window.

You can overcome the handicap of not having a refrigerator window by putting a refrigerator in your window.

Cover the back and side of the window with a light frame on which muslin is stretched.

Tack this frame to the walls and cover with a kitchen paper.

Cover the floor of the window with inexpensive oil cloth.

Secure a refrigerator, kitchen chair, and, if possible, a wall telephone. If you do not have these things, you can easily borrow them from the local dealers who handle such goods.

You can place the meat in the ice chest and use this display indefinitely.

The card with the printed verse is easily made.

The cost of this window is less than $2.

Requests for information in this Department should tersely set out in full all the facts bearing on the case, and all questions should be carefully framed to avoid misconstruction. Write on one side of the sheet only. Letters should be received at this office not later than Tuesday of each week to ensure an answer in the Monday's issue following. The signature and address of the writer must accompany all inquiries, and will be published unless there is a request not to do so. All inquiries received will be answered without charge.

Question: * * *, Pa.—Will you please answer this question, either by mail or through the "Grocery World"?

One of my customers (a farmer) wants to sell me a barrel of vinegar his own make. Am I safe in buying it on account of the pure food law? How will I know if it will stand the pure food law test?

Answer.—You will be protected absolutely if you compel the farmer to give you a signed guarantee that his vinegar is in conformity with the food laws of Pennsylvania. Preferably, have him write the guarantee upon the invoice, so that you will know at all times what goods it covers.

Question: * * *, N. J.—Will you kindly tell me through your columns or refer me to a copy of the "Grocery World" where I may find the law pertaining to selling compound and imitation goods, such as molasses, syrup, lard, etc., in bulk. Are we obliged to label each package put up, and if so, how? Are manufacturers supposed to furnish labels?

Answer.—If this correspondent means the Federal or National law, he can get a copy by writing the Department of Agriculture at Washington, D. C. The Federal law has no application to his case, however, unless he ships goods outside the State, which, as he is a retail grocer, I assume he does not do. For a copy of the New Jersey State food laws, he should write the Secretary of State, Trenton, N. J.

In such cases as this correspondent mentions, the manufacturer is not supposed to supply labels. When he sells a barrel of compound syrup, he considers his legal duty done, and, in fact, it is done, when he properly marks the barrel. As between the retailer and the retailer's customer, the law requires that the customer shall in some way be advised of the character of the goods; told, in other words, that they are not pure. How this shall be done is a question for the retailer. The usual and the best way is to mark his own packages "compound," or whatever may be required, but the notice can be given by word of mouth, or in any other way calculated to inform the consumer and avoid fraud or misunderstanding. Naturally, where the consumer knows in advance what she is buying, as where she asked for "mixed syrup," no notice is necessary.

A Word About Samuel Wilde's Sons Co.

This firm was established nearly a hundred years ago for the importation and sale of coffee, tea and spices. From then to the present time the firm has imported only the best that comes to America, and the policy of the company has always been to give what is bought and to see that proper selections are made for the different sections of the country. It is their proud boast that behind every pound of coffee that they sell stands the reputation gained through nearly a century of fair business dealing. Tell them your coffee troubles, they will smooth away all the rough corners and make it smooth sailing. Their values are the best and prices lowest consistent with honest treatment. They will gladly send samples or have a representative call.

Nordlinger on Coffee.

New York, July 19, 1907.

Editor "Grocery World."

Dear Sir:—There has been a steady increase in the consumption of Brazil coffee, whilst the consumption of milds has shown a tendency to decrease.

The world's production exceeded consumption 6,750,000 bags. All of this excess of the production and more is held out of the market by the three coffee-growing States of Brazil, whose Governments have done just what they stated at the outset they would do; that is, they bought the entire surplus of the past year's production, and are holding it out of the market presumably until consumption should require it, which leaves the available supply for the trade at a lower figure than has been the case in recent years.

The antagonism of the trade and the public in general to the so-called valorization scheme has been persistent since its inception and during the whole period of Government buying.

All hands allowed their stocks to run down to a low ebb, and speculators have liquidated their holdings to a very large extent, which leaves the invisible supply in the world, as well as the speculative commitments, exceptionally small.

The Government purchases ceased about a month ago. Financial arrangements were made to carry the acquired 7,000,000 to 8,000,000 bags for a period of at least twelve months; and if it is true—as is reported—that the world-renowned banking house of Rothschild (which has been opposed from the start to the hazardous undertaking of buying coffee for Government account) is now coming to the aid of Brazil, we believe it is done with the strict understanding that not another bag is to be purchased by the Government. If this is the case it is most likely that the eventual winding up of this venture will likewise be left to the sagacity of the above named bankers, in which event a throwing overboard at ruinously low prices is not to be feared. The question from now on, and until the Government coffee becomes available, will be purely a question of supply and demand.

The consumption of Brazil coffee amounts now to about 13,000,000 bags, with a prospect of its reaching 13,500,000 bags during the present fiscal year. What the production this fiscal year will amount to cannot as yet be stated with any degree of certainty. Reports coming to us and to others vary considerably. We have ourselves estimates of the Rio and Santos crop ranging from 10,000,000 to 16,000,000 bags, with the majority of the estimates tending towards the lower figure.

After the experience of the past year, when an increase in the production of over 100 per cent. was witnessed for the Santos crop, the world at large will be slow to believe that a series of small crops will be encountered, crops small enough as to be millions of bags below the world's requirements.

It stands to reason that after the necessary period of rest and recuperation the trees can produce, with the same favorable weather conditions that they had for the past crop year, a like bumper crop in a few years from now, and this belief cannot be erradicated unless some great catastrophe should wipe out a large number of the trees under cultivation.

But a successful winding up of the Government coffee deal will require an uninterrupted series of small crops. By this we mean, not small in comparison with the bumper crop behind us, but crops below the 11,500,000 bag mark.

Calculating the average consumption of Brazil coffee during the next four years at 14,000,000 bags (including Bahias and Victorias, which is certainly a liberal figure, we would have to have a production of Rio and Santos of not more than 11,500,000 bags to use up the Government holdings during that period, and this would still leave a visible supply in the world of 8,500,000 bags of all kinds.

This is a more favorable aspect than we can reasonably expect to realize.

The folly of the Government undertaking will become more apparent as time rolls by. Each year interest and warehousing expenses will add to the burden, and we believe we are within reason when we calculate this expenditure at $10,000,000 per annum.

The Government started out to establish an equilibrium of values, that the price should not vary much for large and small crops. It paid the planter a very remunerative price, far more than he could have obtained in the open market, for the bulk of his last year's production.

But now we are supposed to be entering a small crop, and we see this crop started at the lowest milreis price which has been ruling in twenty-five years, a sufficient proof that the Government's plan has miscarried. Whilst it enriched the planter on the large crop, it is more than likely that the smaller crop will entail upon him a considerable loss.

For the time being, we consider the position of coffee free from depressing influences. The low price in Brazilian currency puts somewhat of a safeguard on purchases made by consuming markets.

Yours truly,
HENRY NORDLINGER & Co.

The Spice Market.

Baltimore, Md., July 18, 1907.

Editor "Grocery World."

Dear Sir:—The market is more steady, with fair activity. Conditions are generally unchanged.

Pepper.—There is nothing new to report in spot or futures. Fluctuations have not been great during the week. There is no question that the total crops of this year will be many tons short of 1906, and this fact should have the effect of making prices firmer when the autumn demand sets in.

Cayennes.—Mombassas are somewhat firmer. Bright Chillies are in good demand, but firm prices.

Cloves.—Much better demand noted, with practically no change in market prices.

Pimento (Allspice).—Very steady, but unchanged during the week. Little new-crop goods have been offered up to this writing.

Mace.—Good merchantable stock is in active demand and prices are firm.

Nutmegs.—Prices are somewhat firm and numerous holders have practically withdrawn from the market on account of present low levels.

Cassias.—Very firm and in fair demand, which will increase during the next two months.

Gingers are steady and likely to go higher. All crop of ginger is short, and it certainly looks like higher prices must rule.

Seeds are quiet and unchanged during the week. Mustard is now in good demand. There are also numerous inquiries for celery. Green ginger root is now selling well; prices practically unchanged.

Yours truly,
McCORMICK & Co.

The Baltimore Canned Goods Market.

Aberdeen, Md., July 18, 1907.

Editor "Grocery World."

Dear Sir:—The absence of liberal buying of spot tomatoes during the past week has brought about surprising developments, surprising because it is scarcely possible that there is anyone, even the best posted, who would venture the opinion that there would be any carry-over of spot tomatoes, and yet in the face of these conditions several blocks have just come into prominence from obscurity and they are being offered by reliable houses of prominence on the basis of 92½ cents, f. o. b., with assurances that they are 1906 packing and National Pure Food Guaranty will be embodied in the contract. Verily, the depths of the ocean are seldom indicated by the surface observation. For this reason we will not venture an opinion as to how long this price will obtain; whether this is a fore-runner of lower prices or whether a week hence may mean higher prices as have heretofore prevailed. Anybody's guess is good!

Ordinarily extra early tomatoes ripen in Jersey, Southern Virginia and Carolina points in July; it is said that this year the quantities coming from these sections will be exceedingly small in comparison with previous years, and as far as late tomatoes are concerned, and these are the ones that swell the actual figures when the count is finally made, from conservative advices given by almost every packer with whom we have been able to consult, there is little indication of any packing being done of any consequence before September 1st, which is about two weeks later than in ordinary seasons. This condition should appeal to the buyer who studies conditions closely, for he well knows that there is a vast difference between the qualities and quantities of the early and late or general packing, and there is always an interval of nothing doing between these two packing seasons. With the fact in view that the early part of the year indicated large sales of future tomatoes, that unfavorable weather up to the 15th of June created another period of heavy buying, it is natural that we are now undergoing a period of dullness, which agitates the mind of the broker more than his principals; buyers having bought liberally, naturally are not buyers to-day; sellers who sold liberally are not anxious for business to-day; but the man whose motto is, "What we want is orders" must be just as busy during the dull period as during the period of activity, and as a result his efforts to get an unwilling buyer in line with an unwilling seller naturally lead to an offering subject to confirmation, which does not always indicate the true side of the market or the true condition of affairs as it actually is. At such times the sale of 1,000 cases of tomatoes not only misleads the buyer of one city, but in the course of a week or ten days this sale is often reported and told of for several weeks, as though it happened but yesterday, and as a result both buyer and seller are misled as to the true conditions, and when an inactive period asserts itself thereafter considerable wonder is expressed as to why the market should fluctuate so suddenly and so often.

Notwithstanding the dullness which prevails in tomatoes, spot corn is holding its own and strengthening from day to day.

To say that corn fields look sick is putting it mildly, that is, as far as this section is concerned. Continuous rains have kept low ground in such a condition that it has been impossible to work with horses, and owing to the extreme scarcity of labor and the expense thereto attached, it is impossible to use the hoe to a degree that will allow the grower to keep his corn ahead of the weeds.

Yours truly,

AMONG THE TRADE.

The Elks' National Convention, which has been in progress in Philadelphia during the past week, did not bring the expected tremendous increase in the consumption of food products. The newspapers, in their advance writings of the affair, greatly exaggerated the probable number of people expected, some of them announcing that 250,000 people would be in Philadelphia during the week. As it developed, the number hardly exceeded 30,000. Even 30,000 is a large number, but their wants in the food line seemed to amount to but little. It was the general experience of the wholesale fruit and produce men that the hotels and cafes actually bought less stuff than normally.

Heart-to-Heart Talks With Grocery Clerks

"Mutual Aid Sheets" Which a Large Eastern Retail Grocer Tucks in Each Clerk's Weekly Pay Envelope. Some Advice From the Head of the House on Selling Goods and Other Subjects.

[The "Grocery World" has come into possession of a series of "Mutual Aid Sheets," which are weekly little talks issued regularly to its clerks by one of the large retail grocery stores of the East. The talks are typewritten and a copy is enclosed in each clerk's pay envelope. They are so soundly practical and so useful generally that it is this journal's purpose to publish them weekly or bi-weekly for the edification of other clerks as well as other grocers who have clerks.—ED.]

I.

TALK OVER YOUR TROUBLE.

Things happen in connection with the running of this business that are most aggravating.

If your corns are stepped upon occasionally, don't fly off the handle.

Very likely you were to blame, but if you believe you were not to blame assert yourself.

Talk the thing over. Let us have a clear up and down understanding. You are doing yourself an injustice if you harbor an ill will toward the firm. The firm will soon find it out.

We are not writing in an apologetic sense, but rather a desire to have you understand our willingness to have you fit in rightly—to have your interested assistance, and to have this your mind must be free from canker.

GOING INTO DEBT.

Be very careful about getting into debt. Better come to us and talk it over before your probable creditor does so. We don't refer to clothes in this case, but to the habit of burdening yourself with hundreds of dollars' worth of furniture, or maybe the purchase of a house on a very small payment. No one but the experienced knows what the latter entails.

It is not out of curiosity that we refer to these things. It is because it is in keeping with our mutual aid idea—which must be far reaching.

LOOKING PLEASANT.

Beware of being too familiar in business. I don't mean in a vulgar way. I mean that familiarity that says—I've got this customer sure; she wouldn't feel at home in any other store.

No matter how often the customer comes into the store treat her as though she were a new one.

Above all things look pleasant. Cultivate the habit. Give the impression that your surrounding and your treatment are most agreeable. Mind acts upon mind. That's a law that few of us fully realize.

Feel satisfied with your position. If things go wrong and if you think you are treated unfairly and that your services are unappreciated tell it to the manager. If he's a broad man he'll fix things up. He cannot afford to do otherwise if he wants his business to gain. A sour face is too often the result of a grudge against the firm, and no firm must allow this to go on.

I pin my faith to a smile. I believe it gets more business than cut prices. I believe it's a magnet of the first water. Make up your mind that you're bound to please and you'll soon have a following of good friends and you won't have to worry long about an increase of salary.

Food Crop Situation.

The Crop Reporting Board of the Bureau of Statistics of the Department of Agriculture finds, from the reports of the correspondents and agents of the Bureau, as follows: Preliminary returns show the acreage of corn planted to be about 98,099,000 acres, an increase of about 1,361,000 acres, or 1.4 per cent., as compared with the final estimate of the acreage planted last year. The average condition of the growing crop on July 1st was 80.2, as compared with 87.5 on July 1, 1906, 87.3 on July 1, 1905, and a ten-year average of 85.9. The average condition of winter wheat on July 1st was 78.3, as compared with 77.4 last month, 85.6 on July 1, 1906, 82.7 on July 1, 1905, and a ten-year average of 80.4. The average condition of spring wheat on July 1st was 87.2, as compared with 88.7 last month, 91.4 on July 1, 1906, 91 on July 1, 1905, and a ten-year average of 88. Canada Revises Her Pure Tea Regulations.

A dispatch from the Canadian seat of government says the advance in the price of tea and other changed conditions of the market have led the Customs Department to revise the regulations adopted eight years ago to protect Canadian consumers against the importation of adulterated teas. Formerly it was considered that teas costing over 14 cents per pound might be accepted for customs entry as free from adulteration. But, owing to the general advance in price, it has been considered necessary to raise the limit, and now all teas costing 20 cents per pound and under are to be considered as open to suspicion of possible adulteration. While American certificates of fitness of consumption are accepted in Canada, any teas imported from the United States without such certificates are not allowed to be sold in this country unless they pass the purity test. The importation of tea into the United States via Canada in the calendar year 1906 amounted to 2,301,201 pounds, valued at $548,290. This was admitted free of duty, as there is at present no customs charge on American tea imports. Canada has the following customs regulations for this article: "Tea and green coffee imported direct from the country of growth and production and tea and green coffee purchased in bond in the United Kingdom, free"; from other countries, including the United States, 10 per cent. duty is imposed. Under this tariff restriction the shipments of tea from the United States to Canada in the fiscal year 1906 amounted to only 78,564 pounds, valued at $18,522.

"THE BOTTOM AS GOOD AS THE TOP"

Our Apelpi Evaporated Apples are a prime grade of New York fruit, selected from the best flavored and matured apples.

The square cartons are lined with waxed paper and their contents are guaranteed to be as fine as anything in the market.

Every piece of fruit is hand picked and must be perfect before it goes into our machines.

The result is a product for which the demand is not only enormous, but constantly growing.

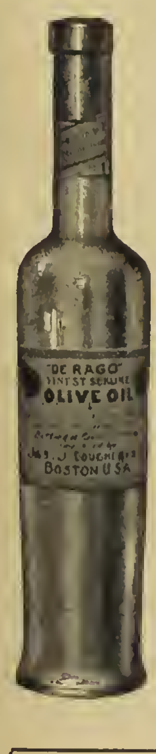
It is Not Only a Food But a Medicine



There are many different kinds of olive oil, but only one De Rago. De Rago Oil is so carefully made and so pure, physicians all over the country prescribe it for invalids.

De Rago is an absolutely unadulterated product of the finest hand-picked olives. It is as carefully prepared as a druggist's prescription. It is the kind that people stick to, for once they try it nothing else seems like real olive oil.

Ritter's Guaranty

In compliance with the rules and regulations for the enforcement of the Food and Drugs Act published by the Commission appointed for this purpose, we have filed a guaranty covering all our products with the Agricultural Department in Washington under the serial number 1017.

In the future all our products will be labeled in accordance with Regulation Nine as follows: Guaranteed under the Food and Drugs Act, June 30, 1906, No. 1017.

This guaranty is sufficient and covers every sale we make and no individual guaranties are necessary.

It has always been our aim to manufacture pure and wholesome food, to comply with existing laws and to protect all who buy our products, and we shall carry out this principle in the future.

We hope to deserve your continued confidence and patronage.

WHERE the GLASS JAR COMES IN

The glass jar in which Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa—and that only—is packed offers the entering wedge to a sale, because it is unusual.

No woman ever saw cocoa packed in glass before; the sight is novel; she asks about it, and if you help a little, she buys.

Bought once, Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa will always be bought again, for it has a flavor which has never been successfully imitated. Our exclusive making process removes the bad, develops the good, and the result is the smoothest, most delicious drinking cocoa on the market.

Imported Delicacies Are Goods Every Grocer Isn't Posted On—I Am, and I'll Tell You Anything About Them You Want To Know

Olive Oil, Macaroni and Roman Cheese direct from Italy are my specialties. The Olive Oil and Roman Cheese I am headquarters for are the famous F. Bertolli's, Lucca, Italy.

The Macaroni is Francesco and Luigi Cirillo's, from Torre Annunziata, Italy.

These are the finest goods coming into this market, and enormous quantities of them are sold throughout this territory. If you want the best, get in touch with

The GREAT Ramly

Is the one spelled R-A-M-L-Y, the finest Turkish cigarette ever made to sell for 10 cents. So good, other cigarettes are made to look like it, so they will sell on the Ramly's reputation.

If you want to give your customers an ideal smoke, sell them the Ramly. You won't have to tell them about it the second time—they'll ask for it.

How Jim Got His Piano Free

Is one of the most interesting stories ever told to grocers. If you will write to us we will tell you about it and at the same time show you how you can get a piano free.

We have made arrangements to spend a large proportion of our advertising appropriation this year to pay grocers for any extra effort on their part to increase the sale of Shredded Codfish, Acme Sliced Beef, Star Boneless Herring, Acme Sliced Bacon, Washed Figs and Peanut Butter. You won't find it difficult to increase your sales on these goods, Mr. Grocer, for there is scarcely a consumer in the land who doesn't know what they are and how unmatchable they are from point of quality.

A Year's Broken Eggs

If you pack your eggs for delivery in the old-fashioned way, without precautions, you'll be surprised if you keep count, how many you break in a year.

Not a single egg need be broken from one year's end to another if you will pack them in Safety Ark Egg Carriers. Many wholesale egg dealers are packing eggs in these carriers to ship to their own trade. If yours doesn't, buy the carriers yourself—they cost only a trifle. They hold a dozen, or half a dozen each—whichever you like—and they not only prevent breakage, but they advertise you as a merchant who believes in doing things right.

MARKED "ENTERPRISE"

Grocers who are posted will not accept a Coffee Mill unless it bears the name "ENTERPRISE." The excellence of the grinders has been proven by many years' efficient service. The strength of their construction cuts out the expense of repairs, and the beauty of their finish makes them an ornament in the store. Get our catalogue at once, illustrating every desirable kind of Rapid Grinding and Pulverizing Mills, from the smallest hand mills up to the most powerful electrically driven mills.

Grocer's Refrigerator

Every Grocer intends to own a

McCRAY REFRIGERATOR

some time. That time should be NOW. Another year without a McCRAY REFRIGERATOR meaus you are allowiug a useless waste of ice aud loss of goods to go ou, thus cutting dowu your profits.

Did you ever consider how many customers you may be losing by selling them butter that they think "Don't taste just right?"

A McCRAY REFRIGERATOR keeps butter and milk sweet and pure. They are perfect refrigerators aud will, in a short time, repay their cost through saving of butter aud other provisions, and of ice. They are sold eutirely ou their merits.

McCRAY REFRIGERATORS ARE GUARANTEED

We also build coolers for Meat Markets, Hotels, Restaurants, etc.—in fact for any purpose.

We can here give you but a faint idea of the McCRAY REFRIGERATORS. Let us send you our catalog No. 64, showiug our large line of grocers' boxes from which you can make a selection.

WRITE FOR OUR CATALOGS: No. 64 for Grocers, No. 57 for Meat Markets, No. 46 for Hotels, Restaurants, Public Institutions, etc., No. 81 for Residences.

No Friends Among the Wheelwrights

Wheelwrights don't think much of the "J. M." delivery wagon; it doesn't make enough money for them. No wagon pays fewer visits to the repair shop, or makes its visits shorter.

The most celebrated delivery wagon made—the best wagon ever built for the grocery trade. Strong as iron, yet easy-running; finest steel tires, and wheels from second-growth hickory.

Condition of Men Who Ate Sulphured Molasses

Extracts from Copy of Louisiana Experimenter's Report Into the Effect of Sulphur-Bleached Molasses Upon Human System. Interesting Since Question Is Only Temporarily Settled by Recent Federal Decision. Subjects of Experiment Gained in Health and Weight.

Apropos of the decision by the United States Agricultural Department that for the present food products, notably syrup and molasses, containing not over 35-1,000 of 1 per cent. of sulphur dioxid, could be sold without molestation under the Federal food law, a copy of the report of the Louisiana investigation into the healthfulness of sulphured molasses, which has reached the "Grocery World" during the week, is extremely pertinent and interesting, particularly so when it is remembered that the Federal decision only provides that molasses containing sulphur may be sold until the present crop is exhausted. This doubtless means that the subject must come up again for final settlement.

The Louisiana investigation into the effect upon the human system of syrup and molasses which had been bleached with sulphur dioxid was conducted by the Louisiana Sugar Experiment Station, and the report of the investigation, with its conclusions, is signed by Prof. Blouin. For the most part it is technical, but the "Grocery World" extracts a few paragraphs here and there so as to make clear the trend and particularly the conclusions reached:

The syrups and molasses used in the experiment were those furnished by the New Orleans Coffee Co., who allowed choice of the several brands which they had on hand. Mr. J. W. Hearn, president of the company, made affidavit that these syrups and molasses were in the original packages coming from the plantations of "Albemarle," "St. James," and "Belle Grove."

Both syrups and molasses have been manufactured for over a hundred years, and for that length of time have been used as articles of food. In the early days of the industry these products were regarded as delicacies, but as their production became greater they have assumed the position of staple food products, not only for man, but for the domestic animals. With the invention of new machinery and with the introduction of chemical methods the processes of manufacture have changed, with the result that the quality of syrups, sugars and molasses has been improved and the quantity increased. From years of observation and experience it was believed that the effects on both man and beast of this class of foods, even when used in large quantities, were beneficial. Only of late the question of the evil effects of sulphur as sulphites has arisen.

The Louisiana experimenter, in trying the effect of preservatives upon human subjects, adopted a much fairer course than Dr. Wiley in his experiments with the use of salicylic and boric acids in food. In the Wiley experiments the preservatives were administered in capsules and the victims impressed with the fact that they were the subjects of an investigation as to the use of poisons upon the human body. The Louisiana experimenters adopted the following course:—

The prospective subjects before being selected were simply told that it was desired to test syrups and molasses. The method of administering the syrups and molasses was carefully explained, as well as the fact that these syrups and molasses were those to which they had long been accustomed. When the syrup feeding period began the squad as a unit attacked the syrups and molasses with a faith born of experience and continued eating these articles in surprisingly large quantities and with great regularity during the entire three weeks. No subject anticipated harmful results—none thought himself a martyr to the cause of science, but rather regarded himself as fortunate. There was no tendency to mental depression and consequent induced physical collapse by constantly recurring thoughts of poison. Not only was there no nausea induced by the food, but, on the contrary, the palatability of these products was such as to create a keen appetite and more than one subject requested a continuance of molasses after it had been stricken from the bill of fare.

There was no feeling of a duty in eating the syrup and molasses, as each subject thoroughly understood that he was to eat his only as his appetite demanded. Even at the risk of repetition, it cannot be too strongly emphasized that the idea of poison, drugs, preservatives and the like was foreign to the conditions of this experiment, and hence could exert no influence on the subject's state of mind.

The summary of the experiments and the conclusions end the report as follows:—

SUMMARY.

The object of the experiment was to observe the effects on human subjects of feeding syrups and molasses of high sulphite content. Negroes in good health were selected on account of:—

1. Their fondness for foods of this kind.
2. Their entire ignorance of the supposed evil effects of the sulphites in the food.

The experiment was divided into five periods of one week each, designated as Periods I, II, III, IV and V. During period I, the subjects were fed on a normal diet without syrup or molasses, and data recorded in order to ascertain their normal conditions. During Periods II, III and IV they were allowed syrup or molasses as they desired to eat it along with their regular food. Observations were made during these periods as to the effects produced.

During Period V they were again fed without molasses and observations and examinations were made. The articles of food were clean, wholesome and substantial and the general conditions such that should harm have resulted it could have been concluded that the sulphites in the syrups, etc., were the cause. The control and supervision of the subjects were such that they could not, had they been so inclined, deviate from the daily programme.

The subjects were in ignorance of the presence of sulphites in their food, and consequently there was no tendency to produce unnatural mental conditions by anticipation of harm resulting from eating the syrups, etc.

CONCLUSIONS.

From the foregoing tabulated data and from the observations of the subjects and from their own statements as to their condition of health, etc., while considering the effects of regular hours, sanitary and hygienic surroundings and general contentment, it is believed that the following conclusions are thoroughly justified:—

(1) From a practical standpoint the experiments on molasses feeding were carried on for a sufficient length of time and on a scale large enough to test the effects of these foods on the human subject in ordinary health.

(2) We believe that our mode of examination is the fairest way to test the effects of substances on the human subject under natural conditions; for here we had a large number of docile and ignorant men who did not know what was expected of them, were neither frightened nor awed, and put in the same condition as persons who partake of molasses as a food; eating of the same according to their taste and liking, and the effects on them carefully and faithfully noted from day to day and week to week.

(3) As in none of our cases were the body functions interfered with, in each one the body weight increased, and as the blood steadily increased in number of red blood cells, in the percentage of haemoglobin, etc., it must be admitted that these subjects were gaining in health and neither doing nor taking anything prejudicial to their physical well-being.

(4) The subjects gradually improved in weight, body functions and blood conditions, notwithstanding the fact that during Periods II, III and IV they daily took a considerable quantity of syrup or molasses containing appreciable quantities of sulphur as sulphites.

The amount of molasses consumed, although in some instances very large, does not seem to have had any deleterious effects on the functions, weight and blood conditions of the subjects, but rather to the contrary.

We are, therefore, free to conclude that molasses feeding, even when said molasses contains as high as over 900 milligrams per kilo of sulphur as sulphites, can be carried on under ordinary circumstances without prejudicial effect to health.

To Go Back to Bleached Glucose.

Glucose Trust Takes Advantage of New Federal Decision Permitting Sulphur Dioxid in Food and Will Henceforth Sell Whitened Glucose to Manufacturers Who Order It.

The Corn Products Co., usually known as the Glucose Trust, has taken immediate advantage of the Federal decision permitting the temporary use of sulphur dioxid in food products. During the past week the concern has issued a circular letter to the trade quoting the decision, and stating that hereafter bleached glucose would be furnished for such of the trade as desired it. The glucose to be supplied under this decision will be simply the old water-white kind which was universally supplied before the recent trouble in Pennsylvania under the old State food law.

In its letter the Trust makes it plain that in order to obtain the bleached glucose it must be specified. Up to date the trade have been slow to take advantage of it, but there seems no doubt that they will eventually, particularly the manufacturing confectionery trade, as the neutral corn-colored glucose which has been supplied since the Pennsylvania trouble has not given satisfaction. It has been prone to ferment, hard to work, and for the most part not to be compared, the candy makers say, with the old white product.

All glucose bleached white with sulphites, however, will be so labeled and will not be guaranteed to conform with the food law.

Heinz Manager Says Food Preservatives Are Unnecessary

Executive Head of Big Pittsburg House Contradicts Other Manufacturers' Statements That Preservatives Must Be Used in Certain Products. Says Anything Can Be Packed Without Them, But Possibly Not in Same Variety of Package.

A few years ago, at the National Pure Food Congress, in St. Louis, I said that artificial preservatives should be restricted. I say to-day that they should be entirely eliminated from any and all foods. They are not necessary. Sour and sweet pickles can be put up and kept without alum or preservatives. Tomato products, mincemeat, fruit preserves, fruit butters, fruit jellies, sauces, relishes and all other products of fruit or vegetable origin can be kept without preservatives.

It is true that in some few cases the manufacturer may have to depart from his present way of manufacturing and packing and when he has done so he will find that he can carry on his business better and with less loss than heretofore.

In a few cases he may have to use smaller packages. In other cases he may have to seek a new package. For instance, in place of a stone crock he may have to use a glass bottle or a tin can, lacquered on the inside, which is a most excellent substitute for it, and in many respects possesses distinct advantages of its own. It can be easily sterilized and is not expensive.

I assert from personal knowledge that there are no food products made of fruits and vegetables which the manufacturer cannot put on the market without artificial preservatives. Those manufacturers who, to-day, say that their business will be ruined if preservatives are eliminated will not say so a few years hence. A few years ago some of them held that if coloring matter was prohibited it would ruin them. All of those men get along without coloring matter to-day and I believe that the majority of them would not go back to its use, even if it were permitted.

The consumer would never have bought a highly colored food if he had known that the color was artificial. The claim is sometimes made that the consumer wants color. Yes, he wants the best he can get, as long as it is natural. As soon as you tell the consumer that it is artificial, and perhaps injurious, he will never purchase the artificially colored food. If you tell the consumer that an article is artificially preserved and that the general use of such articles will likely injure his health, he will never purchase an artificially preserved article of food. If the Government tolerates the use of preservatives it will mean to the consumer that they are not injurious, as practically all food laws state that no deleterious substance shall be used in foods.

If preservatives are to be omitted, it is doubtless true that as to a part of the food industry a few bulk goods may in a measure give way to package goods in the cause of purity and in some cases perhaps packages may have to be reduced in size. Without entering into any extended argument on this point, we may say briefly that we do not regard this as an unmixed evil. The elimination of loss to the dealer through spoilage and the freshness and better sanitary condition of the food itself when bought by the consumer in an original, factory-filled package will largely offset any disadvantage arising from this change.

I cannot contemplate with any degree of satisfaction the reactionary opposition which urges concessions upon certain articles in the matter of purity, on the ground that the absolute prohibition of preservatives will injure a great industry. I believe that such a position is entirely untenable, is not to be justified and cannot be supported by facts. I do not wish to exaggerate dangers in either direction, but through the late Chicago meat agitation that has been going on the minds of the people of the whole world are inflamed. A deplorable prejudice exists against all American food products, and we believe that

III.—What Managing Means.

Are you really a good manager?

A real manager does not try to shoulder all the work in the house and take care of it himself. He knows that almost every hour of the day there is something going to turn up which will require his very best judgment and time to consider it thoroughly. He cannot do that and at the same time take care of a mass of detail work. If he attempts it he is not a real manager. He may be filling a manager's chair and drawing his pay, but he is really nothing but a substitute for a manager, or a manager in the kindergarten stage.

Thousands of good men are today fooling themselves into the belief that they are properly managing a business, when in fact they are slaves to the detail work of the business. They fear to delegate authority to their subordinates, when in fact that is exactly what should be done. All worthy subordinates are anxious to shoulder responsibilities, knowing that their real value depends upon such action, and a judicious selection of assistants is one of the main duties of a real manager. He knows he cannot take care of all details and he at once puts all that work in competent hands, and then he gets a short report to show how that part of the work is going. He realizes at once that if he has the right kind of help the business will run along well, even though he is not there, but with an outfit of poor help he would be unable to do anything, no matter how hard he worked himself.

This is a little point which is often overlooked by men who wish to be managers. F. A. P.

I Knew What I Was About

Most bookkeeping systems gotten up for grocers are invented by people never in the grocery business. The little record book that I am selling, which does all the bookkeeping any grocer needs to do, was invented by me—I am a retail grocer.

That is why it is short, simple and covers the whole storekeeping ground in about one-fourth the time and space of other systems.

The Hotel Eater's Demand

A coffee that succeeds on a hotel table is a good coffee and will stand up under any test you can give it.

That's because hotel-eaters are supercritical. They expect more than they get at home; in fact they expect perfection.

Hotel Astor Coffee is the year-in-and-year-out brand of some of the most exclusive hotels in New York City. They never think of buying anything else—they wouldn't dream of it.

The success of this coffee under this exacting test is really the reason that led us to push it through the grocery trade. We have a plan of building up orders among your trade. May we tell you about it? A postal request is enough.

Helping Gimbel Bros. Fight Retail Grocers.

The enterprising Gimbel Bros., the Philadelphia department storekeepers who admit conducting the only good grocery store in Philadelphia, have harked back to the old abandoned cut-store scheme of offering an assortment of goods for a dollar. Their initial list is as follows:—

An Introductory Parcel for $1.
2 pounds Granulated Sugar..	$ .06
One 5c. can Ritter's Baked Beans	Free
One 10c. can of Shoepeg Corn.	.04
One trial size pkg. Electricity Baked Triscuit	Free
Two 5c. cakes Babbitt's Best Soap	.03
One sample can Vulcanol Stove Polish	Free
One 12c. can Gimbels pure ground Black Pepper	.08
One 5c. pkg. Franklin Mills Self Rising Flour	Free
One 10c. pkg. Jelly Dessert Powder	.06
One individual pkg. Zest Breakfast Food	Free
One pound of our 45c. Mixed Tea	.35
One pkg. of Cerebos Salt, enough to fill shaker	Free
One 5c. cake Scouring Soap...	.03
One pound of our 30c. Liberty Bell Coffee (ground)	.25
One 10c. can Schimmell's Tomato Soup	.05
One generous sample Postum Cereal Coffee	Free
One 10c. pkg. Apitezo Grains..	.05
	$1.00

Anything for nothing, or apparently for nothing, always commends itself to women, so there is a good chance that this offer found many takers. The "Grocery World" feels sure that the manufacturers whose goods are included as "free" in this assortment either contributed the "free" goods gratuitously or made substantial reductions in price, probably the former. It is not the habit of people like the Gimbels to give anything of their own away. If this is the case the "Grocery World" feels that these manufacturers are scarcely treating the retail trade fairly. This journal has never gone so far as to contend that a manufacturer should absolutely refuse to sell a department grocery store. We believe that an honestly conducted department store has exactly as much claim to consideration as any individual retailer. It seems quite clear, however, that no manufacturer should do anything to favor the department store as against the grocery store; in fact, if there is to be partiality, it should lie in the other direction, since the department store has the advantage at nearly every point. Notably in its greater impressiveness, its greater advertising facilities, its greater fertility of invention and its usual lack of scruple.

So that when manufacturers aid a department store grocery to give away goods which every regular grocer is endeavoring to sell, they are doing an unfair act which the organized retail trade should vigorously resent.

Cannot Hide Behind the Law.

From England comes the story of a unique legal decision which has much common sense behind it. The case was in an English bankrupt court. A retail grocer applied for the benefit of the bankrupt laws and asked to be discharged from all his debts. The plea was refused because the bankrupt had engaged in the business with neither experience nor business training and had conducted it from the beginning in a loose and slipshod fashion. Since his predicament was of his own making, therefore, and his plight simply the inevitable, the court refused to relieve this grocer of the burden thus negligently made.

This decision really enunciates the principle that a man who carelessly and lightly enters upon a business of which he knows little or nothing, and who in that business shiftlessly and slipshodly shuffles along, giving neither thought nor care to the learning of it, is personally responsible for the catastrophe which will almost certainly overtake him, and cannot hide from his creditors behind the bankrupt law.

This is pretty nearly elementary common sense.

The Heinz Preservative Contention.

When the general manager of the H. J. Heinz Co. declares without reservation, as he does in another column, that any food made can be successfully packed without preservative, he opposes practically the solid phalanx of all other manufacturers in the same line, and introduces into the preservative question a complication which will probably postpone, rather than hasten, the final conclusion.

Other men who make the same products as the Heinz Co., not so large as the Heinz concern perhaps, but fully as worthy of consideration, declare that they have found no way to avoid preservatives. When the National Association of Food Manufacturers sent its recent inquiry to manufacturers all over the country, asking "what would happen to your business if preservatives were forbidden?" practically every one who answered at all said "we could not continue—we would be ruined."

So that the entire manufacturing industry, outside of the H. J. Heinz Co., contend that preservatives are not only necessary, but indispensable. The Heinz Co. declares they are not even necessary, and unquestionably its statement is entitled to much weight. "What can be done once can be done again."

But there is this to be said, right to that point. If the Heinz Co. has discovered some secret method of avoiding preservatives, is it fair to insist that its competitors shall do what cannot be done, except by the secret plan which the Heinz Co. naturally refuses to disclose? These competitors say "do everything we can, using all of the general knowledge of the trade, we find no way to avoid preservatives." If the Heinz Co. should accompany its denial with a full disclosure of its own method, then the burden of proof would be upon the other manufacturers to show why they could not do as well as the Heinz Co. by the same method.

And this is what the Heinz Co. should do if its statements are to have any weight with the Federal Government. It is manifestly inequitable to compel the entire balance of the manufacturing trade to follow a standard concerning which they know nothing.

Begin With the Bee to Adulterate Honey.

It Is Learned That German Honey Producers Gorge Their Bees With Sweet Stuff in Order to Increase Production. Dark Colored Honey Colored With Electricity. Foreign Methods of Adulteration Far Ahead of Ours.

Special correspondence of "Grocery World."

Washington, D. C.,
July 26, 1907.

Judging from some information secured during the week from a report just placed on file here by Consul-General Richard Guenther, writing from Frankfort, Germany, the food manufacturers of other countries can give us cards and spades when it comes to the artificial improving of food.

A case in point was reported to the recent annual meeting of the Free Association of German Food Articles Chemists. It was charged and proven that it was the practice of certain producers of honey to feed bees with saccharine substances—gorge them, in fact—in order to increase the production of honey. This will henceforth be considered adulteration in Germany. It was also reported to the convention that the makers of dark-colored Australian honey darkened the color of their product by using electricity.

One prominent chemist gave a number of recipes which occasionally are used for making "finest" marmalades. Potato syrup, coloring matter, acids, washed fruit grains, waste from the manufacture of fruit syrups, etc., are the chief ingredients. For the most part, these are new to most American manufacturers.

INSTRUCTION REGARDING PRUNES.

The valley of Santa Clara in Southern California is famous for prunes just as Maine is famous for corn and Jersey for tomatoes.

Santa Clara prunes are the kind you are selling daily. They differ from the Northern prune inasmuch as the skin is more smooth and the meat is more delicate. They hold the dark color longer and they lack coarseness.

They are the cheapest and the most popular at the present time of all evaporated goods and should be mentioned in taking every order. We have a big stock of 60-70s especially and we must move them before the hot weather sets in.

ABOUT PEAS.

We do not handle "soaks" that is common dried peas cooked and canned.

——— sugar is a pea you can recommend to the average buyer. They're medium in size, but evenly graded and not artificially sweetened.

——— Favorite are a little smaller and of excellent flavor.

——— are of a larger variety and have the champion of England flavor.

—— —— Early Junes are still the favorite, being very small and tender and possessing to a remarkable degree the fresh taste.

—— —— look and taste similar to the French or Belgian kind and can be safely sold to your most particular trade.

Now is the time to push peas. Our stock is heavy and you already have the dozen and case prices.

NEW CUSTOMERS.

Whenever you strike what you know to be a new customer be sure and hand the name and address to the manager.

He will do the "follow-up" part and see that she comes again. He will in the first place acknowledge her business with us by a letter of thanks.

Don't overlook this. Under no circumstances must we lose a customer through no fault of ours.

A record will be kept of the clerk that hands in such names and due credit will be given him for the interest he may take in this excellent way of holding new trade.

COMPLAINTS.

Whatever criticism you may hear from time to time about the store don't hesitate to report it. Getting face to face with our faults is the only way we can remedy them.

We must overcome any prejudice that may exist about our business. The mere fact that it is prejudice makes us all the more earnest to fight it.

State the facts as you hear them. The firm is broad enough to listen to all sides and will think all the more of you for being candid.

Brand Made Cherry-Colored Instead of Black by Use of Sulphur. If Ruling Is to Be Obeyed Cherry Color Cannot Be Obtained. Distributing Agent Issues Circular to Buyers.

The past week has witnessed much discussion over the recent Federal decision that goods containing sulphur dioxid would not for the present be prosecuted, particularly as to the effect of the ruling on California dried fruits, all lines of which are bleached with the fumes of sulphur.

Naturally the Government's ruling gives the fruit people much more than they expected, since it was the expectation that the use of sulphur would be forbidden entirely. For this reason the California people are disposed to conform with the ruling, although in almost all lines of dried fruits more sulphur dioxid than the 35-1,000 of 1 per cent. is being used.

In some lines, however, the new ruling will probably necessitate some rather radical changes in business methods. For example, the J. K. Armsby Co., agents for Ruby prunes, has, during the week, written all buyers of 1907 Ruby prunes, notifying them that it might be found impossible to conform with the new ruling and still give the brand of prunes named their characteristic cherry color. As is generally known, Ruby prunes command a premium over ordinary brands, partly because of their rich cherry color, other grades being black. Since prunes invariably turn black in the curing, the lighter color must be produced partly by the use of a large quantity of sulphur, though one factor in its production is that Ruby prunes are picked green.

The chance is, therefore, that the buyers of this year's Ruby prunes will either have to take them black, or nearly black, or if they elect to take them red, will buy the chance of prosecution with their fruit.

Grocery and General Store Failures for Current Periods.

Report for Second Quarter of 1907 Shows Fewer Disasters Than Last Year. Figures for June Show Increase in General Store Failures and Decrease in Grocery Failures.

The report of grocery and general store failures for the month of June shows more general store failures and less grocery failures than the corresponding month of 1906. The figures are as follows:

General stores—In June, 1907, 92; liabilities, $731,336; in June, 1906, 71; liabilities, $462,340.

Grocery stores—In June, 1907, 163; liabilities, $480,201; in June, 1907, 168; liabilities, $502,952.

The official report for the second quarter of 1907 is also at hand, and shows for that period a falling off in both lines. The figures are as follows:—

General stores, second quarter, 1907, 264; liabilities, $1,910,131; second quarter, 1906, 271; liabilities, $1,788,012.

Grocery stores, second quarter, 1907, 488; liabilities, $1,999,866; second quarter, 1906, 512; liabilities, $1,761,921.

Good Prospects for State Food Show. L. J. Callanan Looking Into Paint Adulteration. Death of Grocers' Pet Bills Expected. Sausage Fight Coming. New Cracker Combine Projected.

Special correspondence of "Grocery World."

New York, July 26, 1907.

Thirty-five manufacturers have booths at the State food show, which will be opened Monday in Elmira, under the auspices of the New York State Association of Retail Grocers. The officers of the association are to meet Saturday in Elmira to see that everything is in proper shape for the opening, and some will remain over until the State convention, August 5th to 8th. Secretary Charles Thorpe, who will leave here to-morrow to look after the many details entrusted to him, is confident that this will be, in every respect, a most successful exhibit of food products.

Retailers, as well as jobbers, give somewhat different accounts of the condition of trade these days, according as they sell chiefly to the city or country trade. One will say that he is selling more canned goods and other articles in large packages than usual. This is explained by the demand from the summer boarding houses and hotels. Another finds it a pretty heavy demand for the small packages, and of course it comes from the city trade, buying from hand-to-mouth in the warm months to an even greater extent than in winter.

A number of the wholesale dealers in California dried fruits assembled one day this week in the Mercantile Exchange to meet Willard M. Griffin, representing the California Growers' and Packers' Association. He had been to Washington to consult the authorities with reference to the ruling on the use of sulphur in preparing the fruit. The dealers were assured that the fruit would be prepared and forwarded with every care on the part of the packers and that they would take entire responsibility on any question that arises, if any should arise, as to the fruit conforming to the requirements of the food law.

Mr. Griffin said that while the authorities had not receded from their position with reference to the use of sulphur, yet he believed that there will be no trouble. The packers are to reduce the amount of sulphur used, in accordance with suggestions of the authorities, and Government chemists will co-operate with and advise the packers so that business will not suffer if they show a disposition to do what is right. It is inferred that those packers who try to live up to at least the spirit of the law will receive consideration, while the other class will feel the "big stick."

These being the days when adulterations of all kinds are the subject of discussion, grocer L. J. Callanan is getting ready to direct attention to something different in this line from the usual allegations. Paint is the subject which he has been quietly investigating and on which he will shortly give out some data. He remarks that the average grocer buys considerable paint for painting his store and his home, and is, therefore, interested, as is the general public.

According to the statement that Mr. Callanan is preparing, the adulteration of paint is on a scale that is most surprising. He will advocate the enactment in this State of a law with reference to the standard of paints similar to a statute passed some time ago in a Western State.

Now comes to the front the "Sausage Trust" and an organization of delicatessen merchants who propose to fight the makers of the wursts. Meetings have been held by the dealers who have made known their grievances which, they say, have been aggravated from time to time. The chief trouble is that the manufacturers allow too small a margin of profit, in the opinion of the retailers, who assert that there is no remedy now because of the manufacturers being in a combine. There is talk of lawsuits and of starting independent factories. Nearly 100 retailers attended the meetings, at which plans were discussed for fighting the "Trust," as it is called.

To-day being the last day for Governor Hughes to act on the bills passed at the last regular session of the Legislature, the hopes for the wife's liability bill and other measures which the grocers have advocated are not very bright. The bills which the Governor has not approved by to-day will die. Nobody has any line on what the Governor may do, but it is not usual for a Governor to sign many bills at the last minute. Of course, if the grocers are disappointed this time they will begin all over again and have new bills ready when the Legislature meets next winter.

Brokers and salesmen in the wholesale grocery trade abandoned business cares Wednesday and gave themselves up to the pleasures of their annual golf tournament which took place on the Nassau Country Club grounds. William P. Baker, of Austin, Nichols & Co., proved the champion.

Representatives of the independent cracker companies in this city deny reports that they attended Monday a conference in this city for the purpose of organizing a new combination with resources sufficient to compete with the National Biscuit Co. One of the independent manufacturers said that they have heard talk of such a movement, but that they have not been invited to a conference and that apparently there is nothing in such reports. Other manufacturers spoke in a similar way. Yet, it is pointed out that whenever a combination is in its embryonic stages denials of this sort have always been heard.

Some time ago it was said that St. Louis people were back of the project for a new cracker trust. The latest report is that Baltimore concerns are to form the nucleus of the new combination, with a capitalization of not less than $30,000,000. Two companies are especially mentioned, the Maryland Biscuit Co., and the American Pie and Bread Co. It is said that M. J. Fitzsimmons represents these companies in the negotiations. There are in New York a half dozen independent cracker companies whose aggregate business is sufficiently heavy to make them attractive to any person thinking of forming a combination. But these manufacturers, besides denying that they have attended any conference, speak as if they prefer independence, even to the alluring offers that a new "trust" might present. FRED A. MCGILL.

This Law Would Straighten Mail Order Advertising

A Bill to Be Introduced in Next Congress by Associated Advertising Clubs of America Penalizing All Forms of False Advertising. Boosting Merchandise a la Department Stores Included. States to Be Asked to Pass Same Act.

Special correspondence of "Grocery World."

Washington, D. C.,
July 26, 1907.

It is announced here that at the next session of Congress a bill will be introduced prohibiting all manner of dishonest and fraudulent advertising. The bill is aimed particularly at fake mining advertising, but will also by design include lying mail-order advertising and patent medicine advertising.

The bill is quite lengthy and cannot be reproduced in full for that reason. Some of the more important extracts, however, forbid the following forms of fraudulent advertising:—

Advertisements of "damaged goods sales," of "fire sales," "bankrupt sales" and the like where merchandise not a part of such "damaged," "fire damaged," or "bankrupt stock," or other stock represented in the advertisement is offered, represented or sold as a part of such stock. Advertisements stating former selling values or present or former worth, in excess of recognized trade standards of selling values or worth, or where values or worth are stated and are represented as worth more than such prices at which the goods or commodity advertised were sold in the regular course of business to numbers of persons within a period of eighteen months prior to date of such advertisement. Advertisements which represent merchandise to be other than as stated upon labels or other markings upon containers or packages of such merchandise, as in the case of food labeled and sold in compliance with pure food laws of this or other States or of the United States.

Advertisements wherein is contained any statement or statements of quantity or quality of merchandise to be sold, and containing exaggerated or false statements of quantity, or where the goods offered are seconds, inferior quality, or otherwise not of standard quality and such facts are not disclosed in the wording of the advertisement. Advertisements offering for sale any merchandise or other commodity described as of one material or substance only, when it is a combination of two or more materials or substances, especially where the undisclosed material or substance is an adulterant or material used to cheapen the merchandise or other commodity, as in instance where goods are represented as "all wool" goods, but are "cotton and wool."

Advertisements containing statements as of fact, when it is a matter of opinion, unless clearly stated as opinion, as where the words "The best in the world," "finest cheviots," etc., are used. Advertisements in which are contained so-called guarantees or promise of guarantee of future increase in value of shares, stocks, bonds, real estate, merchandise or other commodity.

Advertisements predicting future greater values or stating present value of stocks, bonds, lands, merchandise or other commodities, and wherein is contained, as an incentive to purchase the stocks, bonds, lands, merchandise or other commodities, a description of the procedure, success or results of any similar enterprise or process of manufacture or similar merchandise.

The bill will be fathered by the Associated Advertising Clubs of America, which will also endeavor to have the same act passed by each individual State.

Does Light Attract YOU?

We believe you'll say yes—as a matter of fact it attracts us all. If you could induce almost everybody who passed your store to stop and look in your window, and you had something there which made them remember your store, would you increase your trade? We think you'll say yes again. You can put a display of goods in your window which you can afford to sell close and light it with electric devices in such a way that every passer-by will stop to look. You can so impress them that they will come in the next day to buy. You know what to do with them when they come in. Sell them enough to pay the cost of your lighting for a month.

We will show you how it can be done if you will go to the phone and call us up. Don't wait a day. Start to increase your trade NOW.

Window-Dressing Articles Wanted

For several months the "Grocery World" has been looking for the right man to take charge of its "Window-Dressing Department" and contribute a good, suggestive weekly article. We have tried several, but none was exactly what was wanted.

We will now attempt to get these articles from our subscribers, probably every one of whom has some technical knowledge of window-dressing. What we want is articles clearly describing window displays that can be made by the average retailer; not necessarily new or original—in fact, those which have been used successfully are perhaps preferable to all others.

For all acceptable articles, the "Grocery World" will pay an average price of $5 each. All matter sent in under this arrangement should be addressed to the "Window-Dressing Department." If drawings are also sent they should be made throughout in black ink (not pencil).

THE GROCERY MARKETS

Tea.

The tea market is absolutely unchanged from last week. The entire line of prices is steady and without even slight fluctuation. First and second crops of both new Japans and new Formosas have practically been closed out, having sold at comparatively high prices. The demand for tea is only fair.

Coffee.

The market for Rio and Santos coffee has ruled very dull during the past week, and options have declined about 15 to 20 points. Actual Brazil coffee remains about the same. The cause of the weakness in options is that the speculative trade have stubbornly stayed out of the market, which is the very last thing the syndicate want or can stand. In the absence of speculative interest, the market will continue to sag of its own weight. Mild coffees are steady and unchanged. Mocha is steady, except the long bean, which has declined a fraction. Java has scored another advance, a thousand mats having been sold in New York during the week at 1 cent per pound advance over the June sale price.

Syrup and Molasses.

Glucose is unchanged for the week. As reported elsewhere, the Trust announced during the week that it would now supply bleached-white glucose if the trade desired it. This is under the Federal Government's decision that sulphur dioxid can temporarily be used in food. Compound syrup is dull and unchanged in price. Sugar syrup is in fair demand at ruling prices. Molasses is quiet and unchanged. The sulphur dioxid decision has been a godsend to the Louisiana syrup and molasses people, as they were greatly perturbed over their coming crop.

Sugar.

The raw sugar market has rapidly improved during the past week, owing to a variety of causes, chiefly reaction from a too depressed market, improvement in European growing weather and excess of meltings over receipts. Refined sugar is unchanged, but if raws continue firm nobody would be surprised to see an advance. The demand for refined sugar is fair, as is usual at this season.

Fish.

New mackerel is in good demand, mainly because most grades are scarce. The supply of new shore mackerel is still light, and the price is gradually advancing, due partly to scarcity and partly to improving quality. New Irish mackerel is also available, but in very small quantities. New Norways have shown rather poor quality and the price has therefore been comparatively low. Cod, hake and haddock are all dull and unchanged in price. Domestic sardines are in fair demand at unchanged prices. Imported sardines are firm and wanted. Salmon is fairly active and unchanged. Future sockeye prices are still not forthcoming.

Canned Goods.

Tomatoes, both spot and futures, are unchanged in price, and as to futures, quiet. There is a small demand for spot goods, however, in spite of the expectation of a good big pack. In spite of the fact that the crop expectations are large and ruling prices high, nobody seems inclined to sell short or to speculate in any way. Corn is very dull at unchanged prices. Peas are in light demand at steady prices. There has been no recession from ruling prices. New York State packers will deliver only about 75 per cent. Apples are unchanged and in moderate demand. Peaches are unchanged and very dull. Sales of future California canned goods have been very large, confirmations of orders placed subject to approval of price having been general. The line of small Baltimore canned goods is unchanged, with the exception of string beans, which show a sharp advance.

Dried Fruits.

Nothing is doing in prunes, but an advance is prophesied, owing to the heavy drop of the growing fruit on the coast. As stated, there has been no change as yet, but the feeling is strong, and sellers are very few. Peaches are unchanged. The sulphur decision has unsettled the market very much, owing to the fact that more than the maximum percentage of sulphur allowed by the Government is used in peaches. On this account certain large buyers are refusing to accept, as good delivery peaches sold for future delivery and bleached in the usual way. Certain brands of prunes are also deeply affected by the ruling. Raisins are unchanged, but still firm. The spot supply is exceedingly low. Apricots are unimproved in condition. Currants are in fair demand at steady prices. Apples are firm and unchanged in price.

Beans and Peas.

Pea beans are unchanged, and the demand is moderate. Marrows are very slow at ruling prices. California limas rule unchanged, both coast and spot, and the demand is light. Split peas are unchanged. Green and yellow splits are both firm and green are scarce. Whole dried peas are high and scarce.

Butter.

There has been no change in the price of any grade of butter, but the feeling is easier. The receipts continue liberal, and the present outlook is for a decline of probably 1 cent per pound. There is a good consumptive as well as speculative demand. The decline was due chiefly to the increase in make. The quality is running very good for the season, and the future market depends largely upon the future make.

Eggs.

The egg market is very firm at the recent advance. The prolonged spell of hot weather is responsible for a good part of the receipts showing defects, and this has made fancy eggs, free from heat, very scarce. Fresh eggs clean up on arrival, while under grades are slow and the price nominal. Present conditions are likely to exist as long as the weather remains warm, and there is, therefore, not likely to be any radical change in the near future.

Cheese.

There is no change in the jobbing quotations on cheese, but the market is a little easier, and the country markets show a decline of ⅛ cent per pound. The quality of the present make of cheese is running good, as is usual for the season. If there is any change in price it will be a slight decline, owing to the extreme high prices prevailing.

Provisions.

The provision market remains about in the same condition as for the last two weeks. There is a very good consumptive demand for everything in the smoked meat line, but the supply is ample, and no material changes in price are looked for soon. Pure and compound lard are firm and unchanged, the demand being good for both. Dried beef, barrel pork and canned meats are about unchanged and in very good demand.

Produce.

New potatoes, $2 to $2.50 per barrel; seconds, $1.25 to $1.50, demand fair to good; spinach, $1.50 per barrel, scarce and in good demand; watercress, 2½ cents per bunch, demand fair; cucumbers, 75 to 80 cents per basket, demand good; cabbage, 40 to 50 cents per barrel, demand fair to good; squash, 30 to 35 cents per basket, demand fair to good; peas, 50 to 75 cents per basket, demand good; string beans, wax, 50 to 60 cents; green, 40 to 50 cents, fair to good demand; yellow onions, 65 to 75 cents per basket, demand fair to good; new carrots, 1½ cents per bunch, demand poor; scullions, $1 per 100, demand poor; radishes, 1 cent per bunch, de-

Hams and Bacon Are in Demand

Are you giving your trade the best values for their money? You can easily do so by giving the people what they want and that is which are plump, have short shanks and round butts, are sweet, being sugar-cured; mild, because they are not old, and of fine flavor, being smoked a nice bright color, which is only possible by using hickory wood.

They are sold by the leading retail grocers in Philadelphia, having the most select and exacting trade.

Burk's "BUTTERNUT" Bacon

is the only substitute for "Crown Brand" Hams. It is selected from corn-fed hogs, specially cured with granulated sugar, mild and of exquisite flavor and taste.

It is put up in narrow strips, strung with white cord, cut absolutely square, making any waste impossible; wrapped in highly glazed and parchment paper and embellished on two sides with an attractive blue and white label.

A red seal is attached to the cord, stating the specific merits of this bacon, which is also known to the trade as the "5-B" Bacon, because of its name.

Burk's Butternut BONELESS Breakfast BACON

This Bacon was first introduced at the National Export Exposition, held in Philadelphia in 1899, and it is largely due to its ever-increasing popularity that

BELL'S SEASONING

You have no idea what a variety of ways your customers have for using garden herbs as seasoning.

Some will use sage alone, others thyme alone, others sweet marjorum, others a combination of two or three, but not one out of a hundred will use a full combination of garden herbs and spices. And so they miss just that much of the delicious result.

Bell's Spiced Seasoning is not a hit or miss seasoning, neither is it a combination of two or three ingredients. It contains all the garden herbs and spices that will go together and is the very perfection of delicious seasoning.

For roasts, poultry, soups—everything, in fact that requires seasoning. We have never known a woman to drop Bell's Spiced Seasoning when once she tried it.

MARKET NOTES.

Peaches are now coming from Alabama as well as Georgia. The Alabamas are not particularly good and average $2 per crate. Georgia peaches range from $1 to $3 and the quality is good. The first few baskets of New Jersey peaches are in market, averaging $1 per truck basket. The quality is poor. Delaware peaches are again expected to be short this year.

Raspberries are winding up their season. The range is 5 to 8 cents per pint, and the quality is fine. The demand is good.

Blackberries seem to be wanted at 7 to 10 cents per quart. The entire receipts are from near-by points.

Huckleberries are coming freely from near-by points and range from 10 to 12 cents. The demand is active.

Florida watermelons range from 20 to 40 cents each and are wanted. The quality is excellent.

Jersey tomatoes have come into market more plentifully during the past week, and the price has declined to $1.25 to $1.50 per basket. The quality is still poor.

North Carolina limas range from $2 to $3.50, and the demand is good.

New apples are straggling into market, but the quality is mostly poor. The price ranges from 25 to 75 cents per basket. The demand is fair.

California pears are coming forward and range from $3.50 to $3.75. The demand is fair.

A few grapes have come North from Florida, but the supply has now stopped temporarily.

Jersey corn is now coming forward, but the quality is poor. The range is 50 to 75 cents per basket and the demand is fair.

New Jersey eggplants are quoted at $2 per basket. Florida is still shipping North, and the quotation is $2 to $2.50.

New Rice Opening High.

Market for New Crop Mississippi Rice Opens at Seven and a Half Cents for Fancy Head. Somewhat Above Spot Price.

Judging from the opening price of new Mississippi River rice, there is not soon to be much cessation from the high rice prices. New fancy head rice has opened at 7½ cents per pound, f. o. b. Southern shipping points. Spot rice of the same quality is ruling at 7 cents in barrels and 6¾ cents in pockets.

The prices here given are on what is known as the early crop of rice. The high opening values are not due to crop shortage, as the expectation is for 465,000 pockets, which is a good crop. The entire country, however, is bare of rice, owing to last year's shortage, and the demand is therefore expected to absorb the entire early production in a very short time.

Certain Northern rice operators are selling the market short; that is, taking orders about ½ cent below the New Orleans market, with the apparent intention of holding back shipment until the price may drop. These people are reported to have secured a considerable amount of business on this basis.

THE SCIENCE OF ADVERTISING

This Department is devoted to the criticism of advertising matter sent in, to the devising of new advertising ideas for special occasions, upon request, and to the suggesting of original advertisements when data is supplied. All communications sent in for this Department should be addressed to the Editor of Science of Advertising. They will be filed in their order and taken up according to strict rotation.

A Harrisburg, Pa., correspondent, who by the way neglects to sign his name, asks me to say a few words on what should be a grocer's attitude toward his competitors in his advertising. "I know a good many think a competitor should be ignored," he writes, "but I do not see how a live business man can ignore men who are endeavoring in every way they can command to get his trade."

I should like to make it plain that I do not like anonymous communications. In a perfectly proper query like this there is no reason in the world why the writer's name should be suppressed. Understand, I am always ready to withhold names, if correspondents desire, no matter how trivial I may think the reason, but I have a right to insist that the name be given to me, at any rate. However, I am willing to assume that the Harrisburg correspondent omitted his name through an oversight, and will discuss his question on that assumption.

Undoubtedly the dignified way to treat a competitor in your advertising is to ignore him absolutely, if you can, though fewer and fewer advertisers are able in this day to do it, it seems. Take the case of John Wanamaker's Philadelphia store. Ten years ago you could search Wanamaker's advertising from one year's end to another without finding one single reference to a competitor. To-day you can scarcely read one of his advertisements that doesn't refer to competition in either of two ways. In the case of other large stores, the Wanamaker advertising very frequently makes all manner of biting charges of fraud and misrepresentation; even calling such names as "sharks." In the case of the smaller stores the Wanamaker advertising has adopted a lofty, benignant tone of patronage. "Don't blame the little stores if you don't find what you want there. They are doing the best they can. Naturally they could hardly expect to compete with us, with their limited capital and small resources." Very clever, I consider this, and very effective.

My own idea of the treatment of a competitor through advertising is to fit yourself to the competitor. From the beginning, and through it all, I should admit that mine was not the only store. Not the plan of Gimbel Bros. with their grocery department—to assert that before they came there were no good grocery stores, and that the only good one now is theirs. I should take this position: "There are other good stores. I am working and thinking night and day to make this just a little bit better than the others—better in values given, better in service—and I believe I have succeeded. But not for a minute would I assert that mine is the only good grocery store here. Of course, there are other good store. But there always must be a best, you know." This fair attitude of frankness makes a good impression on everybody. It shows a desire to be square and just, and no business attitude yields higher dividends.

I would never go out of my way to mix up with a competitor. If he made any untrue insinuations against me I should come back just as hard as I could and try to give him just a little better than he sent. For example, in a little village I know of in New York State there are only two exclusive grocers. These became enemies over a personal matter, and one hinted one day in a circular that there was considerable short-weight goods in town, and the public should beware. Naturally this pointed direct to the other grocer. My judgment in a case like this, particularly in a small village where people are narrow, is that it never pays to ignore such insinuations, and when the grocer who was attacked in this case struck back he did exactly right. First he drew up an affidavit that never once since he had been in business had he given any less than full weight. Then he deliberately accused the grocer, who was the aggressor, of selling three brands of goods that had been found to be adulterated by the State food officials. There was quite a monkey and parrot time for a while, and I admit that this was unfortunate and should be avoided wherever possible, but in this case it was preferable to sitting down and taking an ugly insinuation. There was talk of libel suits and challenges and all that sort of thing, but in the end the grocer who had started the row subsided and subsequently kept very quiet.

So that my creed as to the treatment of a competitor in your advertising is to ignore him as long as you can, admit that he is a good business man whenever it comes in your way to do it, but defend yourself when attacked just as sharply as possible.

Cantaloupes are from Georgia and Arizona; California is done shipping. The Georgia melons range from $1 to $2 and the Arizonas $2.50 to $3.50. The latter are scarce and active.

Getting Back Into the Business.

A friend of mine threw up the grocery business last week and took a job as salesman.

Not for a wholesale grocery house either.

He had a little store in Columbus, Ohio, which made him a comfortable living and maybe a little more. Man about 40. His store's been up for sale for nearly a year, and when he finally got a buyer he had to let the place go for less than inventory.

I saw him last week just after the papers had been signed.

"You don't know when you're well off," I said, when he told me.

"Don't I, though!" he retorted. "By George, I never was so happy in my life! No more of the grocery business for me! I think it's the worst business on the face of the earth! Gee whiz, but maybe I ain't glad to get out of it!"

"What's the wife think?" I asked.

"Well," he said, "she hopes for the best."

Women are keener about these life changes than we are. "Hopes for the best" told me her attitude just as if I'd heard it from her own lips.

Now, I'd like to bet a thousand dollars that this Columbus man who thanks Heaven he's out of the grocery business and never wants to look a grocery store in the face again will be back in the grocery business, or wish he was, within two years.

Because he was a good grocer and made a success of his store.

I've known a lot of fellows who weren't cut out for the business at all to leave it and never get back, but I've known almost none to get out and stay out, if they were good grocers and got out simply to get into some other business they ought was easier.

There was the case of a grocer I knew in Philadelphia. Many a time he's kicked to me about the hard work he had to do. "Gettin' up at 2 o'clock in the morning to go to the wharf to buy truck!" seemed to be the worst thing he had against the business.

"If you're looking for cinches," I said to him once, "we're just out."

"I don't want any cinch," he replied, "but the grocery business is a mean, grubby, dirty business and I'm going to get out of it just as quick as I can!"

Several weeks after that I saw him again. He told me he had a chance to get into the saloon business and was tickled to death over the prospects.

"I may get into poltics the first thing you know," he confided to me in great glee, and that night I prayed for him.

He let his store go for bare invoice—and he had a peach of a little place—got his license and started in to sell rum.

What d'ye think of a man who would rather sell gin than food?

Only last week that man's wife told me he was so sick of his stinkin' saloon he couldn't sleep at nights. He was going to let it go, she said, the very first minute he could and get back into the grocery business.

I've known I don't know how many experiences like this. Grocers who would have liked their business all right if they hadn't seen some other they thought was easier, giving up a good established business to get into the one they thought easier, and getting a lovely case of cold feet within six months!

I remember one case where it was the wife's fault; all women ain't sensible, you know.

Her husband had a fine store, and was so wrapped up in it that he insisted on doing most of the work himself. He liked it all right, but his wife thought he worked too hard and dogged at him till he sold out. With the money he got he bought a partnership in an insurance business.

I don't wonder you say "wellibedam!" I didn't say it, because I'm always a perfect lady in conversation, but I thunk it several times.

To that dear wife, anxious over her hard-worked husband, the insurance business seemed just the nicest, most refined business going. No aprons, no dirty hands, no night work, no anything objectionable.

The insurance business was all right, but her husband was as well cut out to succeed in it as a blind rhinocerous. He walked his poor old hoofs off trying to do business and fell down completely. After only three months of it he managed to get out, but he dropped several hundred dollars and when he went to buy his old store back he got squeezed about $300 more.

But he's back, and he told me himself that the first night after he got the store again he cried himself to sleep for joy.

"I don't care if I work myself to death!" he told me, "this old business and this old store are good enough for me!"

No, sir, I can't even think of one case in my experience—I stopped writing just now and tried to—where a man left the grocery business simply and solely to get into something easier that he didn't get back into it sooner or later.

When all's said and done, boys, it's a pretty darned good business! Why, a man that owns a good grocery business in a country town ought to thank God he's alive! None of us who have to work for a living has any more reason to, I can tell him that, and few as much!

THE STROLLER.

Suit to Test Government's Rulings on Pure Whisky.

Manufacturers and rectifiers of blended whiskies are much interested in the suit now in course of preparation to test the rulings of the Federal Pure Food Commission in regard to the labeling and sale of such goods. When counsel fully decide upon the plan of attack a special package is to be prepared and shipped from one State into another, thus placing it in interstate commerce and allowing of prosecution. Great care is to be taken in arranging this package so that every point in the case may be brought before the courts. The main point will be to get a decision on the proper definition of the term "like substances," the blenders contending that this product is in reality whisky and not "imitation whisky," as it must be labeled, according to the rulings under the Food and Drugs Act.

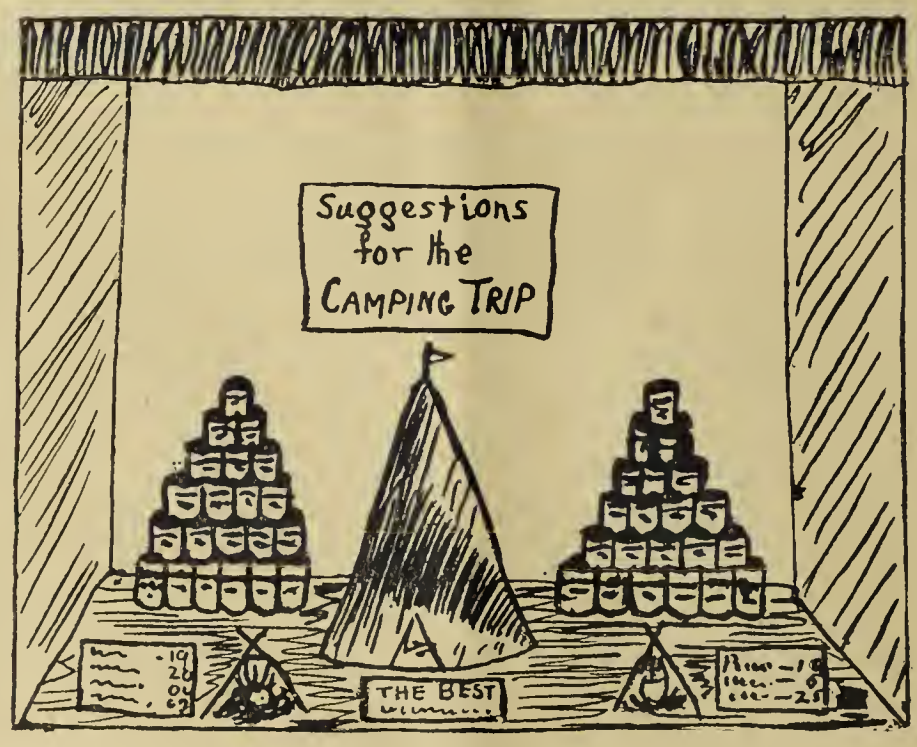
Some products possess excellent qualities when first put on the market, but they afterwards deteriorate. It is not so with Snider's Catsup. It has been on the market twenty-five years and is better to-day than ever.

Window Dressing for Grocers

In this department from now on will appear each week suggestive articles regarding the proper use of the retail grocer's window. An endeavor will be made to deal with the subject practically, in other words, to show grocers how they can turn their windows into a money-making feature of their business. Subscribers are invited to make free use of the department by submitting both queries or suggestions.

A Camping Goods Display.

For making an attractive and inexpensive fancy window display, suitable to this season of the year, procure a little sheet of cotton or canvas goods and with the aid of a few pieces of wood make a little tent in the centre of the window. On the sides of the tent build a small camp fire by arranging a couple of sticks, as in the illustration. Have a can or a small kettle hanging from the crossed sticks, under which put a few chips of wood so as to represent a fire. In the rear of the camp fire have various canned goods built up in the form of a triangle and in the front of the window have signs with a list of the various delicacies stating their prices.



This window arrangement is very simple and attractive and the only expense connected with it is the tent and the unkindled camp fires.

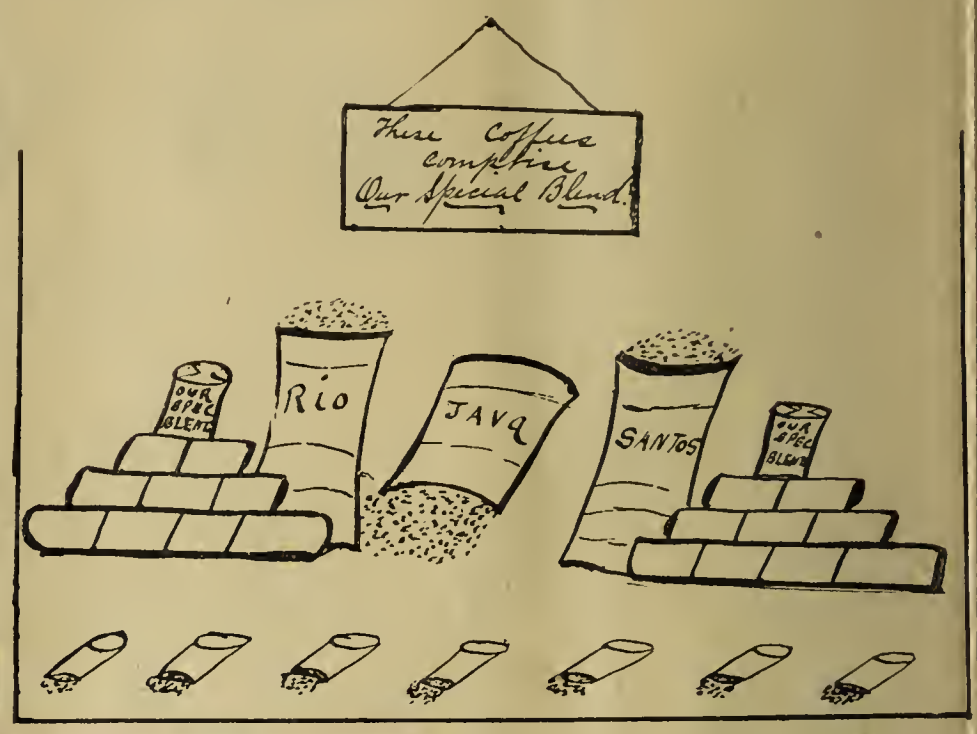
A Package Coffee Window.

There appears to have been a great interest taken in my article of July 1st on a coffee window, as I have had quite a number of inquiries from different States, and as far down as Georgia commenting on the same, and asking for formulas for blends. So I will give you another one for a package coffee window in the illustration.



First of all have your coffee done up in neat and attractive paper or carton packages, make pyramids in front of and on either side of the window, with the name of the coffee to the front, and having open packages arranged along the front edge of the window.

In the centre of the window and between the pyramids place a bag half full of roasted coffee, with the bag rolled back, lying flat on the floor and allowing the coffee to spill out, while on each side, and a little back of the pyramids, place a full bag of roasted coffee, with top of bag rolled down, and showing the coffee heaped high in the bag.

Have the three bags plainly marked with stencil what kind of coffee it is, or have the name printed on neat cards and placed on the top of each bag.

Then hang a printed card from the ceiling by invisible wire or light thread with this sign:—

"These coffees comprise our special blend" (or the name of the blend you are showing).

This window can be made very attractive by filling the bare spaces with the package goods.

A Big New York Concern to Share Their Profits with Retailers.

The Knickerbocker Chocolate Co., of New York, who have for years very extensively advertised their Barker's Hasty Lunch Chocolate and Bedford and Blue Ribbon Cocoas, have recently made an arrangement to share their profits with retail grocers. They have identified themselves with the Manufacturers' Trade-mark Association of New York and are packing Universal Coupons for dealers with their goods to give them an extra inducement for pushing them.

This proposition should interest grocers everywhere because of the character of this firm and the well-known popularity of its products. Universal Coupons are the most valuable premium vouchers ever issued because they are exchangeable for such high-class merchandise and because they come to grocers from so many sources, they can accumulate enough of them in a short time to entitle them to such articles as roll-top desks, platform scales, delivery wagons and even pianos and automobiles.

In pushing Barker's Hasty Lunch Chocolate, Bedford Cocoa and Blue Ribbon Cocoa grocers are certain of two things which are important—pleasing their trade and getting an extra profit which they can't get with any other chocolate or cocoa on the market.

As to Cutting Meat

Two Authorities on the Subject Express Opinions. Western Man Says Cutting of Carcass Meat Most Difficult Part of Meat Business. Washington Retailer Wants to Be Shown.

The article in a recent issue of the "Grocery World" giving an interview with a wholesale meat dealer, in which he expressed the opinion that if retail meat dealers would inform themselves more fully on how to cut meat without waste the prices of meat need not be so high, has aroused much attention and some criticism. One expression of opinion apropos of the article in question has come from J. F. Boes, of Bay City, Mich., whose statement is as follows:—

> The cutting up of meat, particularly carcass meat, is the most difficult problem that the butcher has to solve to-day, and until he can solve this problem he will never be in a position to make a success of the butcher business. To begin with, it is unreasonable to think of getting a gross profit of 35 per cent.; there are more who sell for 20 per cent. or even less. The great trouble is that most butchers merely take into consideration the large per cent. of profit which they make on the better cuts, and lose sight of the loss on the cheaper cuts, such as waste shank, suet flank and even plate. A man can buy ribs, loins, plates and all cuts of meat and figure his percentage, but when it comes to a carcass of beef the greater amount of men sell it by guess or according to their competitors.
> What I want to ask is, is this a safe way of doing business? Take a grocer, for instance, when potatoes, butter, eggs, flour or any other article advances the grocer advances the selling price accordingly, so as to make the same per cent. of profit, and it matters but little to the grocer what any article costs, as he bases his profits accordingly. But, on the other hand, the butcher wants to maintain a fixed retail price on his meats the year around regardless of what they cost. This is an utter impossibility. It is true that when beef costs 5, 6 or 7 cents by the carcass the butcher can make some money because the percentage of pounds of beef that command a larger price than the original cost is greater than the number of pounds that are sold for less, but as the price of meats advances the number of pounds of the cheaper cuts increase. For instance, beef at 9 cents by the carcass cuts about 70 per cent. to the better cuts and 30 per cent. to the cheaper, and when beef costs 10 cents it will cut about 50 per cent. to each. This is based on a profit of 35 per cent. On a 20 per cent. gross profit beef will cut as follows:—

	Cheap Cuts. Per Ct.	Better Cuts. Per Ct.
Beef costs 5c. by carcass.	30	70
Beef costs 6c. by carcass.	34	66
Beef costs 7c. by carcass.	37½	62½
Beef costs 8c. by carcass.	41	59
Beef costs 9c. by carcass.	45½	54½
Beef costs 10c. by carcass.	54½	45½

> Better cuts means anything that brings more than the first cost; cheaper cuts, that which brings cost or less than cost.
> This table should convince any butcher that he makes money when beef is 7 cents or less, and why at 8 cents or 9 cents he scarcely breaks even, and at 10 cents actually loses money.

800 lbs. carcass beef at 9c. per lb.	$72.00
35 per cent. gross profit	25.20
Total	$97.20
124 lbs. loin at 20c.	$24.80
108 lbs. round steak at 15c.	16.20
42 lbs. rump roast at 12½c.	5.25
88 lbs. rib roast at 18c.	15.84

18 lbs. suet at 6c.	1.08
50 lbs. shank, 30c. each	1.20
16 lbs. neck at 7c.	1.12

800 lbs. at 12⅛ c.	$97.07

> This means trimmed meat ready to sell.

Another communication comes from F. G. Alexander, 945 R street Northwest, Washington, D. C. Mr. Alexander is a retail dealer and wants to be shown. He writes as follows:—

> I am not from Missouri, but that wholesaler that gave your representative the explanation of present excessive meat prices will have to show me. I have been cutting meats for thirty years and over, and I would like him to tell us retailers, through your paper, how to cut 14½ cents a pound out of a side of beef and not charge exorbitant prices. I do not believe he ever did it. He should give up the wholesale business and join the retailers.

Two Reports of the Baltimore Canned Goods Market.

No. 1.

Baltimore, Md., July 26, 1907.
Editor "Grocery World."

Dear Sir:—In spite of the lateness of the season, orders are coming in fairly well from nearby as well as distant points, and there is enough business to indicate very healthy conditions in the Spot tomato market. While there is naturally no disposition to buy tomatoes to carry over into the new season, yet the consumptive demand evidently is excellent, as it usually is so at this season of the year.

The future tomato market is dull and firm, buyers and sellers apparently being indifferent about making deals. Some orders are being placed at 85 cents for No. 3 standards and 67½ cents for No. 2 standards.

The market closes in strong shape on string beans. Raw material has been scarce and high and offerings of the canned article are light.

The best trades in cheap seconds and standard early June peas are moving out quietly, and a number of Baltimore packers are already cleaned out. There is no doubt but what the conditions in the pea market are good and healthy. There was no stock of old peas carried over, and it looks as though the country is hungry for peas. Then again, while there has been a fair pack, yet it is doubtful if the pack, taken as a whole, has been as great as expected and no more than can be well taken care of.

It looks as though the Baltimore market is bare of sweet potatoes. We have picked up a few lots this week at $1 per dozen. We are not quoting them this week, as it is doubtful if they are obtainable.

The pineapple market has quietly been working into very much better shape. This applies to all grades of pineapple.

Blackberries.—The sharp advance in the market on raw stock has caused a firmer market on the canned article. We were buying blackberries freely last week at 60 cents per dozen. The market closes strong at 65 cents per dozen, with very light offerings. The season is still on, and conditions may improve, though the outlook is not favorable.

The inquiry for future peaches is heavy from all sections, but no prices are yet being made. The crop conditions are too uncertain to justify packers in making prices, and it is doubtful if prices will be made until the season is well on.

Yours truly,
THOS. G. CRANWELL & CO.

No. 2.

Baltimore, Md., July 26, 1907.
Editor "Grocery World."

Dear Sir:—No reaction toward a higher level of prices for tomatoes is yet in sight, and the market continues easy with an increase in the offerings for both spot and future deliveries. The favorable weather for the crop during the past four weeks has greatly relieved the situation, and whatever uncertainty existed previous to that time concerning the outlook has almost disappeared, but it may be well to keep in mind the fact that the tomato crop is not yet harvested. During the week just ended the demand was almost wholly for spot tomatoes, the buying of futures being very light. It may prove to be good policy to anticipate your wants for the fall and winter should the reaction carry the prices below the lowest price quoted to-day.

The chief feature of interest in this market was perhaps the development of an unexpected shortage in the raspberry crop. A smaller crop than the average was anticipated, but it proves to be much lighter than it was supposed to be. Next, pineapples were quite active and prices advanced. We have repeatedly called attention to the strong position of that article. Blueberries and blackberries are now coming in and the developments during next week in those two lines will be of more than usual interest in view of the shortage in all other lines of fruits. Blackberries are already stronger and advancing. No prices have yet been made here on any grade or size of new peaches or pears because of the continued uncertainty about the crops of them.

Every article in the line of vegetables continue firm to strong this week, excepting tomatoes, and it looks like those lines which have not yet had a substantial improvement in prices are in line for some advance in price, though peas may lag behind until the pack of that article in other sections is fully developed, concerning which there seems to be some misgiving. String beans are especially firm because of the light spring pack. Spot sweet potatoes are sold out. Cove oysters are getting scarce and are very firm.

Yours truly,
THOS. J. MEEHAN & CO.

The Spice Market.

Baltimore, Md., July 24, 1907.
Editor "Grocery World."

Dear Sir:—The market is more active and the tendency is towards better conditions and higher prices. We call to your attention the fact that the Government agents have recently exported a lot of nutmegs that came into the country due to the fact that they were wormy and unfit for sale. This shall have the effect of excluding some spices that were formerly shipped in and entered into consumption.

Pepper.—The market is slightly firmer. Spot demand seems to be increasing, and crop shortages are apparent. This will have a tendency towards higher values during this fall. We certainly look to see higher prices rule.

Cayennes are in fair demand and practically unchanged during the week.

Cloves.—The demand is improving. There are no reliable news as regards new crop. The demand is likely to increase, and prices should advance.

Pimento (Allspice).—The crop is reported small and of poor quality. The demand is decidedly better and the tendency is upward. In fact, this article has advanced ½ cent per pound during the last ten days.

Mace.—Good grades are in active demand. Stocks are reported small.

Nutmegs are practically unchanged and low prices are still prevailing, which are apparently safe. We look to see higher values a little later on.

Cassias are quite firm and the demand is very good. Stocks are small and, on account of the anticipated demand, present values are certainly safe.

Gingers are very steady and higher values will positively rule. Jamaica is particularly high.

Seeds.—The feature of the week is a very sudden advance in Poppy, market up to 9 cents and upward for prime quality. Canary, Mustard and Caraway are practically unchanged.

Yours truly,
McCORMICK & CO.

AMONG THE TRADE.

One of the curious and interesting exhibits in the wholesale fruit market during the week was a consignment of Hamburg grapes from South Africa. Although there is nothing about them to tell, it is understood that they are grown in hothouses. The fruit, though about six weeks on its way, arrived in perfect condition, each bunch being wrapped in cotton wool and cheese cloth. The wholesale price was 90 cents per pound and only about half a dozen local retailers have any market for it.

Dairy and Food Commissioner James Foust held a conference with several Philadelphia wholesale grocers at the River Front stores last Tuesday, for the purpose of discussing the jobber's position under the guarantee clause of the new State food law. The Commissioner is reported as having told the jobbers that he would be compelled to prosecute them in all cases of adulterated food traced to them, no matter how many guarantees they held.

As guests of the Retail Grocers' Association of Reading, about 5,000 men, women and children of that city visited Willow Grove Park last Wednesday morning at 8 o'clock. The picknickers traveled in a special train over the Philadelphia and Reading Railway, made up of five sections, each composed of ten cars. A number of the guests came directly into the city, where they enjoyed part of the day, going out to the park in the afternoon to join the rest of their host and participate in the merry-making. The committee who had in charge the entertainment of the visitors were all members of the Retail Grocers' Association. They are Joseph F. Morris, William H. Luppold, W. C. K. Fisher, Edward H. Kramer, Adolph Kauffman, C. E. Esterly, Reuben Sindel, E. B. Boyer, Edward Clammer, Irvin Hepler, Myer Mertzbacher and W. J. Clump. The Allentown grocers also brought several hundred people to Willow Grove on Thursday.

The past week has been marked by a number of well-developed riots in the downtown Hebrew district, caused by an advance in the price of the Kosher (clean) meat used by Orthodox Hebrews. The retail dealers, being compelled to by the jobbers, they said, advanced the price several cents per pound and in consequence several hundred women took to the warpath. Nearly every meat shop in the district was surrounded, and either boycotted, or kerosene was poured on the stock, making it unsalable. Several arrests were made in the course of the day.

Food Commissioner Foust on Clean Grocers

Says Some Pithy Things on Retailers Who Keep Their Stores and Their Wares Clean and Fit to Eat. The Month's Work in the Dairy and Food Department.

In the latest number of the Pennsylvania Dairy and Food Bulletin, which reports the work of the Food Department up to June 15, 1907, Commissioner Foust takes occasion to say some things about the clean grocer. The following remarks are worthy of note:—

The vendor who advertises himself as grocer to particular people has the right idea. All householders wish to train in the particular class, no matter what the actual facts, and he who proclaims his adherence to the law of cleanliness is pretty sure to attract attention and win custom. If he wishes to keep it and enlarge it he must consistently and carefully live up to his profession every day. he is in business.

It is the habit of the grocer to display his wares in front of his place of business. The passer-by will notice a great difference in the method of dealers. Nor will he find it difficult to arrive at correct conclusions concerning the class of customers each grocer has or the general character and disposition at the head of each establishment. A grocer's actions speak louder than words, and they speak through his display.

The careful dealer makes careful provision against the nuisances inseparable from the summer months. So far as he is able he keeps down the dust on his sidewalk and the adjoining street. He procures suitable protection for the goods displayed in front of his building and in the storeroom to the end that dust may be shut out and that the pestilential and inquisitive fly may not work its evil will upon his wares. He is looking out for the welfare of patrons in a practical way.

The summary of the month's work is as follows:—

Pennsylvania News Items.

Three of the Meat Inspectors provided for in the Lutz Bill passed by the late Legislature were appointed by Governor Stuart on Wednesday: George B. Jobson, Franklin, Venango County; T. E. Munce, Washington, and Otto G. Noak, Reading, all vouched for as experts in meat inspection and all veterinarians.

Baked Beans That Are Baked.

Do you know that of the many varieties of so-called baked beans only a few are really baked? Most of them are boiled or steamed and there is as much difference between the two as between day and night. The baked beans put up by Lutz & Schramm Co., of Allegheny, Pa., are actually baked, and in addition to that the tomato sauce used is tomato sauce, not catsup, and catsup is most generally used and called tomato sauce. Get in touch with the L. & S. brand and you will soon see the difference in your sales.

There Are a Great Many Kinds of Olive Oil, But Only ONE De Rago

Where doctors recommend De Rago Olive Oil for sick people you can be sure it is the right oil for well people.

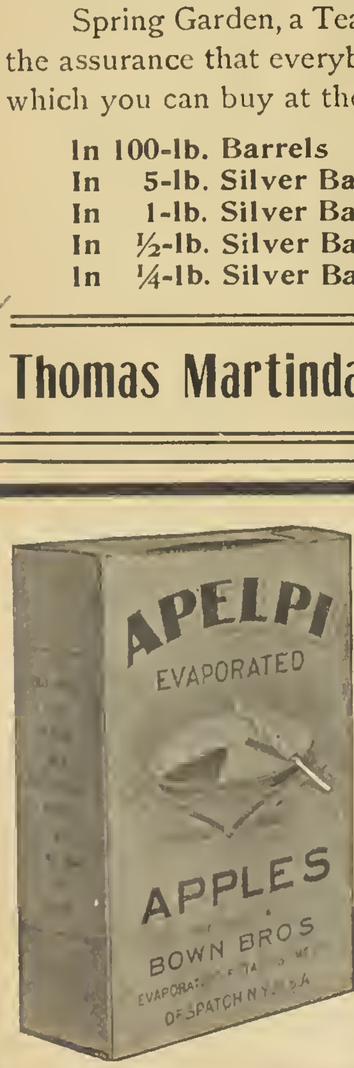
It is the ONE Olive Oil that is made from PERFECT olives.

If you sell De Rago Oil to a customer you can be certain that customer will keep coming to you for it as nothing else will ever take its place.

Jas. J. Loughery & Company
Importers Boston, Mass.



What's the Difference?

The answer—"the bottom is as good as the top." You know what this means in Evaporated Apples. It means that your customers will keep buying that kind, and we know you will keep buying that kind to supply your customers. APELPI on a package of evaporated apples is a positive guarantee that the fruit is the finest that can be had, and its preparation can't be excelled.

Ritter's Guaranty

In compliance with the rules and regulations for the enforcement of the Food and Drugs Act published by the Commission appointed for this purpose, we have filed a guaranty covering all our products with the Agricultural Department in Washington under the serial number 1017.

In the future all our products will be labeled in accordance with Regulation Nine as follows: Guaranteed under the Food and Drugs Act, June 30, 1906, No. 1017.

This guaranty is sufficient and covers every sale we make and no individual guaranties are necessary.

It has always been our aim to manufacture pure and wholesome food, to comply with existing laws and to protect all who buy our products, and we shall carry out this principle in the future.

We hope to deserve your continued confidence and patronage.

HERE IS YOUR QUESTION ANSWERED

Why put in Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa when you are selling five brands now? Well, because it is different from the rest, for one reason. It is the only cocoa packed in glass. It stands alone, and you know how novelty helps a thing to sell. The grocer who infuses a little novelty into his business is the grocer who succeeds.

Another thing, Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa is better than the rest. That isn't a bluff, honestly. We take out of our cocoa, in the making, a substance which other manufacturers allow in, greatly to the injury of the flavor of their goods.

Now do you know why you should sell it?

Will you mention the "Grocery World" when you write?

40 cents a pound

DAYTON PROTECTION

for DAYTON USERS

Almost every merchant knows of the efforts of a certain competing scale concern to discredit the onesty and reliability of DAYTON Computing Scales.

In some cities that concern has even gone so far as to seek State and City legislation against AYTON Scales.

The DAYTON Company, after a legal fight in Omaha, has succeeded in getting a estraining all parties from interfering with DAYTON Scales now in use in that city. Full text of the action nd Court's decision sent free upon request.

UNITED STATES INJUNCTION

A FIGHT TO THE FINISH.—Every user of DAYTON MONEYWEIGHT Computing Scales can e sure of two things:—

—First, that they are absolutely honest, accurate, reliable, the best and most economical butchers' and rocers' scales ever built;

—Second, that the DAYTON Company will spare no expense to protect their users from the attacks of nscrupulous competitors who find it hard to market their scales in fair and open competition.

Write to-day for descriptive matter of the newest DAYTON Scales, and get our liberal exchange offer.

I have made a study of Italian Macaroni, Olive Oil and Roman Cheese. I will be glad to give information about these goods to anybody who will get in touch with me.

The finest Macaroni that comes into this market is Francesco and Luigi Cirillo's, of Torre Annunziata, Italy. The best Olive Oil and Roman Cheese is F. Bertolli's, of Lucca, Italy.

I am headquarters for all three. If you want the real thing, write, or come and see me.

Do You Know What Ramly Stands For?

We'll tell you—the finest Turkish cigarette ever made to sell for 10 cents. It is the one that is so widely imitated by our competitors.

If you want particular smokers to come to you, put the Ramly in stock.

"A Drink You Can Sell

Clicquot Club Ginger Ale is the finest ginger ale bottled in this country. It is made in Massachusetts, from the purest, sterilized, sparkling water and bottled by experts. Our plant is as clean as a place making food and drink should be, and this shows in both the amber clearness and the exquisite flavor.

There is a steady summer sale for ginger ale, particularly for Clicquot Club, which has been advertised to consumers all over the country. Your profit on this will satisfy you.

What Rennet Must Do to Be Good

Good rennet has gotten to be one of the most staple dessert specialties that a grocer can sell.

If it is good. To be good, it must coagulate milk in a few minutes and it must not spoil. James T. Shinn's Liquid Rennet fills these requirements under a double-barreled guarantee. And besides that, it has the flavor—the clean, delicate, penetrating flavor that makes rennet-eating grow into a habit.

As to profit, $3.00 return on a $1.50 investment is good enough, eh?

The First Step Toward
A BIG BUSINESS

Instead of buying Coffee, Tea, Baking Powder, etc. in packages, which means building up a trade on somebody else's goods—buy in bulk and use this ideal carton—which we will label as you wish, and deliver ready to pack your goods in. This means "Boosting YOUR OWN business."

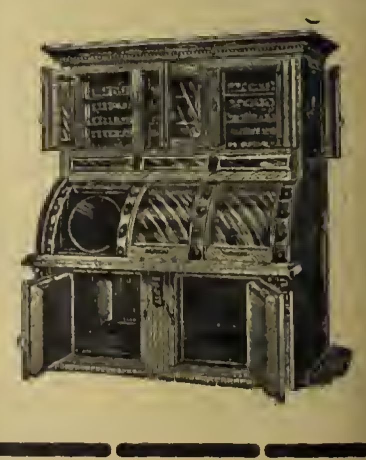
The Looks Are The Small Point



OUR Roll-top Refrigerator, shown in cut, is the handsomest, richest-looking refrigerator made. But that is its smallest point. Its greatest point is that it is guaranteed to save twenty per cent. of your ice bills—a point oft repeated; but do you know anything more important?

All Hill Refrigerators have that point about them, because all are fitted with the Hill patented system of refrigeration.

Milk Products Have Continued in Popularity with Dealer and Consumer for 50 YEARS

PEERLESS BRAND EVAPORATED MILK (UNSWEETENED)

BORDEN'S CONDENSED MILK CO., Originators of Condensed Milk and "Leaders of Quality."

Our Coffee tests best, is best and is best to buy

You can't go wrong in dealing with us, because we take care of you in every particular. Being importers we know exactly what we buy, not once but all the time, with the result that once we have met your requirements we are able to do so always.

Our house has been in existence nearly a century, and during that time we have treated everybody fairly and honestly, giving them exactly what they bought, so that to-day our business reputation gained through that long period stands behind every pound of Coffee we sell.

It will pay you to get in touch with us either through samples or by having a representative call.

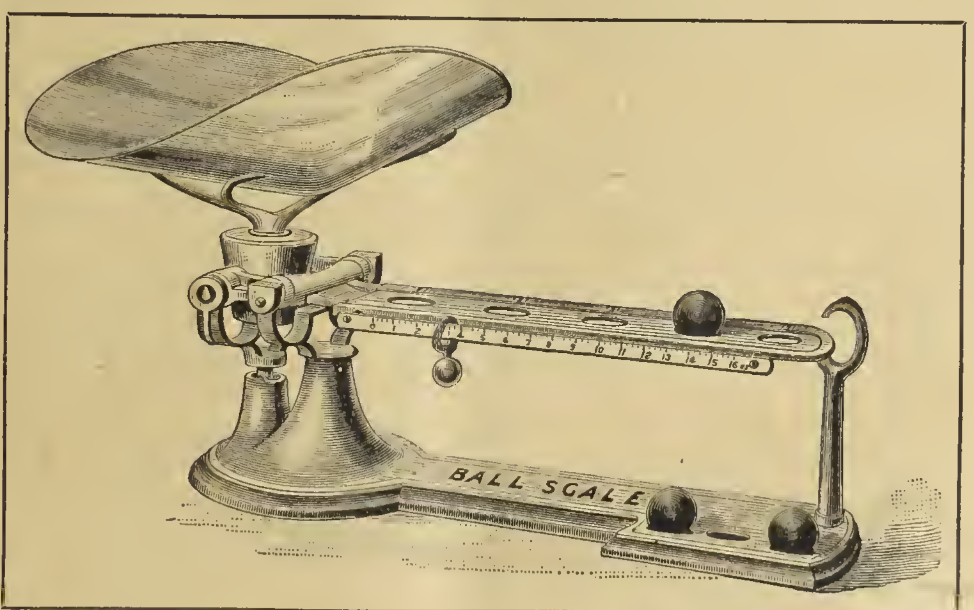
Losing Your Weights?

Get a Troemner No. 24 Ball Scale



Greatest Improvement in Rapid Weighing

Does away with weights absolutely. The balls are placed in the holes, thus weighing from one to fifteen pounds, with the sixteen ounces in fractions on the side beam, giving a total weighing capacity of sixteen pounds.

If 1000 Retailers in Philadelphia Recommended Us, Would YOU Believe in Us?

One of the hardest propositions which confront the retailer is to turn their bad debts into cash. Lots of them have tried different collection agencies, paid retaining or subscription fees and got no results; so it is hard to convince them that any one can help to bring the beats to book.

We show you how to collect your own accounts; nobody handles your money but you. We can give you the names of a thousand merchants in Philadelphia whom we have shown how to get money due them which had been charged off long before they heard of us.

It costs you nothing to find out what our plan is—can you afford not to?

The Consolidated Law Association, Inc.

Mr. Grocer:

"It's All in the Shreds"

If you eat Shredded Wheat you will know how good it is; and when you know how good it is you can offer it to your customers with confidence and enthusiasm. If you could see us make Shredded Wheat you would never eat any other cereal. Take a package home with you. For breakfast, heat the biscuit in oven until it is crisp, pour hot milk over it, then add a little cream and a dash of salt. For lunch or dinner try a Shredded Wheat Biscuit with strawberries and cream. In place of white flour bread eat toasted Triscuit, the Shredded Wheat wafer. You will then become a Shredded Wheat "booster"—and when you "boost" Shredded Wheat you are "boosting" yourselt.

Shredded Wheat is as staple as granulated sugar. Contains more nutriment than corn or oats and is more easily digested. A steady seller at a good profit. Always Clean. Always Pure. Always Right.

Many New York City Grocers Again Charged With Gross Dishonesty

Bureau of Weights and Measures in Its Annual Report for 1906-07, Reveals Large Number of Short Weight Frauds. Chief Bureau Tells How They are Worked.

Notwithstanding the astounding charges of gross short weight frauds which the New York City Bureau of Weights and Measures made against grocers in July, 1906, when its annual report was filed, and the widespread reforms which were supposed to follow those charges, the bureau has just filed another annual report for the year ending June 30, 1907, in which it finds many New York City grocers still guilty of short weight practices in a lamentable degree.

The "Grocery World" has procured a copy of the bureau's report, and here reproduces the salient portions:—

For the quarter ending June 30th the total number of inspections was 11,573. The violations found were:

Bakery	8
Butcher	163
Butter, cheese and eggs	3
Coal	261
Coal wagon	7
Confectionery	2
Dairy	3
Delicatessen	30
Dry goods	1
Fish	16
Fruits	7
Groceries	178
Hardware	4
Ice	3
Junk	25
Macaroni	1
Poultry and game	1
Paints	4
Peddlers	38
Provisions	5
Official scales	1
Vegetables	5
Miscellaneous	5
Total number places in which violations were found	771

Description of scales, weights and other instruments found out of order, incorrect and in use, and made subject of complaints under section 386 and 388 of the ordinance are as follows:—

Patent balances	84
Spring balances	315
Patent balances	1
Computing scales	43
Platform scales	28
Scale beams	11
Weights	158
Dry measures	14
Liquid measures	27
Linear measures	5
Miscellaneous (section 388)	178
Total number of violations	864
Amount of penalties involved in complaints forwarded to the Bureau for the recovery of penalties for prosecution	$18,005.00
Amount of penalties reported by the Corporation Counsel as being recovered during the quarter.	$2,008.50

Number of instruments inspected and sealed:—

Counter balances	8,869
Spring balances	9,277
Patent balances	810
Computing scales	833
Platform scales	1,407
Scale beams	207
Steel yards	59
Weights	54,444
Measures (dry, liquid, linear)	9,187
Miscellaneous	94
Total	85,187

Last year the Bureau inspections showed 453 retail grocers using short-weight scales. One of the hardest tasks of this year was the stopping of grocers from selling short-weight packages. This has been done with the assistance of the Penal Code and the District Attorney of Kings County by prosecuting one dealer for petty larceny. By a personal inspection in one of the stores where light-weight packages such as sugar, tea, coffee, etc., were reported to be sold, I found the difficulty met with by the inspectors of the Bureau in detecting such mean, petty larceny, to be in securing the necessary evidence that the said packages were "knowingly" sold short weight, for when I asked for a 3½-pound package of sugar the owner did not hand over one of the "shorts," but proceeded to fill up 3½ pounds on the scale, while there stood upwards of 100 put-up packages on the shelf behind the counter. When asked to hurry and hand out a done-up package, he answered, "those are not 3½-pound bags, but are bags sold for 17 cents." (Very clever.) This grocer told me that the ordinance did not prevent him from selling bags at a stated price, which was true, as the ordinance does not prohibit such, so the Penal Code was made use of.

One of the largest retail grocers in Brooklyn was visited by an inspector at noon on a certain Saturday, who tested a number of packages of flour and sugar which he found short-weight from four to six ounces. He warned the manager and the clerks not to sell these short-weight packages, but to refill them to the correct weight. The answer given by the manager was that 99 out of every 100 grocers did the same. At about 8 P. M. that same day, the inspector visited the store while several packages were being sold, and upon the reweighing of a 3½-pound bag of flour purchased it was found to be one of the several bags examined that day, and 4½-ounces short weight. The result of this inspection and prosecution was very effective in stopping this kind of larceny, and the fact that the dealer was fined $100 spread throughout the grocery trade.

The attention of the Bureau was not given to the detection of the small dealers only, but was turned upon the larger tradespeople as well, as all the big dry goods and department stores in the city were visited and all the instruments inspected and tested. This was done last year for the first time, and wherever any scales or other measures were found to be incorrect or out of balance, complaint was made in the usual manner. One such complaint was lodged against one of the most popular stores for having five scales incorrect, which resulted in the collection of $50 penalty, and another department store settled two complaints for $25.

Some grocers selling butter were found to have small scales used for the purpose of weighing butter and generally so dilapidated that it was mostly a half ounce out of balance. This seemed a small matter to some respectable grocerymen when they were called upon to settle up, but it did not seem such to the Bureau. When it is considered that butter sold at such high prices as it is at this writing, between 38 and 40 cents per pound at retail and sold in mostly quarter and half-pound drafts, the profit to the grocer and the loss to the purchaser who pays for one-half or one ounce short on scale or weight in addition to the weight of the wooden dish, which is generally about one-half an ounce, at the retail rate of 2½ cents per ounce, it will readily be seen that this practice results in much profit to the dishonest grocer and a great loss to the buyer, as there is generally on an average of 75 weighings out of a firkin of 60 pounds, each firkin averaging a profit of over $1 above the lawful. One very peculiar fact is that the grocers do not make a mistake and give overweight.

Another old-time practice of the dishonest groceryman in giving short measure was discovered late this year in the shape of liquid measures being used for dry measures in the selling of dry beans, peas, etc. When questioned, each one had practically the same excuse —that of custom. Some said if they sold a dry quart, they would have to charge more. This is absurd, as all such articles are bought by dry measure or the equivalent in weight by those selling the same by liquid measure. When it is considered that in some beans and peas there is a difference of two ounces or more in weight a liquid and a dry quart measure, it can be seen what a fraud this is, practiced under the semblance of custom. As this practice was only discovered the latter part of this year, and the ordinance is not explicit enough upon this subject, it proposed in the amendment of the ordinance to embody that part of the State Commerce Law, compelling such articles to be sold by dry measure or weight This is another step in the line of protection offered by this Bureau to the public which had not come to its notice before.

This Bureau did not stop at retail shops or dealers, but inspected all the wholesale grocery dealers' scales in the city as well, thereby protecting the retailer against short weight.

The work of the Municipal Bureau is to be very much enlarged this year, it is understood, and an arrangement made whereby close co-operation with the State Bureau can be effected.

The conditions throughout the whole of New York State seem also to be very bad. In beginning a tour of the State, following out the provisions of a law passed by the last Legislature, Fritz Reichmann, State Superintendent of Weights and Measures, says that dealers in the State get $20,000,000 annually by the use of inaccurate weights and measures. It must be remembered that the above report of the Bureau of Weights and Measures covered New York City only.

In Albany he visited twenty grocery stores and in nearly every place found the measures were deficient. He said that in many butcher shops in New York some time ago some clerks got no salary, but "a certain amount of meat was dealt out to them in the morning and what they made off it was their wages. In other words, their salaries depended on how much overweight their sales could show at the close of a day's business."

The Most Ingenious Plan of Fighting Mail Order Concerns.

How the Merchants of the West Are Bushwhacking Them. Lay Out a Regular Plan of Mulcting Them By Fake Inquiries for Data and Estimates. Injured Concerns Appeal to Federal Authorities.

Retail merchants all over the country are greatly interested in the issue which is steadily formulating between the mail-order houses of the West and the Western Lumbermen's Association, the method of whose attack was recently touched upon in these columns.

No such fighting against the mail-order concerns has ever been heard of. Whatever may be said of the ethics of it, it is admirable when judged by the standard of cold-blooded ingenuity. The lumbermen's interest in the matter comes from the fact that all of the mail-order houses sell sash, blinds and do a contract business in such things. The Lumbermen's Associations, aided by the organized retail merchants' associations of the West, set out to harass the mail-order houses, and this is how they are doing it. The scheme is to cause the mail-order concerns to send out great numbers of catalogues and letters and to annoy and embarrass them in every conceivable way and cause them enormous outlay in postage and clerical expense. The figuring of estimates on sash and doors and other finished pieces requires expert clerical forces and takes much time, and the favorite plan of those who wish to harass the mail-order houses is to ask for estimates on long and intricate bills of goods.

Anonymously the lumbermen have given widespread Western circulation to a little black book containing a list of the mail-order houses. Five steps of attack are outlined in the "little black books," as follows:—

First.—Send for catalogues and lists in response to advertising of the listed company.

Second.—Send a list of material for the company to give an estimate on.

Third.—Send letters asking questions requiring special reply, remembering that all letters will be answered by printed replies if labor of writing special replies can be avoided.

Fourth.—Send for sample of roofing.

Fifth.—Send for paint color-card.

The book instructs the recipient to cautiously enlist the assistance of all his friends and get them to follow the same course which he is pursuing.

The attack has succeeded to such an extent that the mail-order houses have now appealed to the Federal authorities for aid.

Trade Press Betraying Retailers in Coffee Fight

Philadelphia Authority Shows Up Weakness of Brazil Coffee Syndicate and Asserts That Most Trade Papers Are Controlled by Interests Inimical to the Retail Grocer. Java Coffee Advances Again.

The small transactions on the New York Coffee Exchange during the last ten days, in spite of all the alarmist rumors that are energetically spread abroad by the syndicate, are an indication that the retailer of coffee is, in a measure, determined not to repeat his actions of the past, but to carry but a moderate stock of coffee and to confine his purchases as far as possible to his current needs.

The reflex of this policy is shown by that adopted by the roasters and distributers. Not being given the encouragement to carry a large stock, which would come from an extra heavy demand, they have also carried a moderate stock and adopted the same hand-to-mouth policy. This throws the whole burden on the syndicate.

Outside speculators in Wall street, seeing that the market for actual coffees has not broadened out, are also taking but small interest in the coffee market. While the crop of coffee is large, the crop of suckers is remarkably small, and this combination, if it continues to exist, will prevent the syndicate's plans from maturing. If the trade press, to whom the retailer looks for proper posting, was faithful to its trust, there is no question but that the syndicate's plan would come to grief. Unfortunately, with some notable exceptions, these sheets are controlled by the large interests. One paper published in New York, which goes to the retail grocer, has been particularly flagrant in trying to mislead the retailer as to his real interests. By clever inuendo and suggestion it has faithfully forwarded all the plans of these "thimble riggers."

The Java situation has assumed a condition constantly predicted in our columns during the last six months. Large increase in consumption, coupled with no increase in production, are having their logical effect on the values of this coffee. Last week the market advanced 1 cent per pound on actual sales. On spot this week it scored another advance of 1 cent per pound, 3,700 mats of interior selling at just 1 cent per pound over the sale of a similar quantity last week. This makes a total advance of 3½ cents since January 1st, and a further advance of 2 cents per pound seems positively sure to come before October is ushered in. This advance will, however, only put the price of Java to a price that in the past has been considered a low one. It must be borne in mind that the price (through non-use of this coffee) has been at a ruinous figure for the planter.

Peddling by Outside Concerns Again Protected by Interstate Commerce

City of Altoona (Pa.) Tries to Enforce Peddling Tax Against Agent of Ohio Grocery Concern But Court Defeats Attempt on Ground That the Business Sought to Be Taxed Was Interstate Commerce.

Another Pennsylvania court has decided that peddling done in Pennsylvania by outside concerns who ship the goods into the State in original packages cannot be interfered with by State laws, as it is under the protection of interstate commerce.

The case transpired in Altoona, Pa., where the Citizens' Wholesale Supply Co., a grocery concern of Columbus, Ohio, sent its agents to secure orders. They secured some and an attempt was made to make them pay a peddlers' license. The agents resisted on the ground that their business was interstate commerce and not subject to local peddling taxes, and this position the court upheld.

The Altoona ordinance of 1906 provides as follows:—

> Sec. 9. All persons soliciting orders for goods, wares, merchandise, works of art or any other kind of article for sale from house to house, or from place to place, or selling or taking orders for same by sample, shall pay an annual license tax of $20.
> Section 17 ordains a penalty for soliciting orders or selling without having paid the aforesaid license.

The defendant was convicted and fined for a violation of said ordinance. He was an agent of the Citizens' Wholesale Supply Co., of Columbus, Ohio, and solicited orders for groceries in the city of Altoona, Pa., and took written orders for same and forwarded said orders to Columbus, Ohio. The Citizens' Wholesale Supply Co., upon receipt of orders taken by the defendant, as aforesaid, put up in packages at its warehouse in the city of Columbus goods to fill the same. The goods intended for each purchaser were put in packages which were separate and distinct from and entirely unconnected with the packages intended for any other person, and the name and address of the purchaser of the contents of each package was then stenciled on the outside thereof. All of said packages were then shipped by said company from Columbus, Ohio, by railroad freight to its agent in Altoona, Pa., for delivery to the proper purchasers at their residences in that city; the said packages not to be delivered by said agent until paid for by the purchaser. The freight agent received from the freight station of the Pennsylvania Railroad at Altoona the package of goods, and removed the same to a room on Eighth avenue, in said city, where they were assorted, and from which point they were delivered to the several purchasers, each purchaser receiving the package on which his name and address was marked. The agent, upon the delivery of the goods, collected the money therefore, which he sent to his principal at Columbus, Ohio.

As stated, the defense was "interstate commerce," and the court, Blair County Common Pleas Court, in deciding the case in the Supply Co's favor, ruled as follows:—

> A manufacturer of goods which are legitimate subjects of commerce, who carries on his business of manufacturing in one State, can send an agent into another State to solicit orders for the products of his manufactory without paying to the latter State a tax for the privilege of thus trying to sell his goods.
> A license tax imposed by a State upon an agent of a citizen of another State for the privilege of selling his goods in the former State is a direct burden on interstate commerce, and therefore beyond the power of the State.
> No State can levy a tax on interstate commerce in any form, whether by way of duties and on the transportation of the subject of that commerce, or on the receipts derived from that transportation, or on the occupation or business of carrying it on.

Norton, the "Christ-like" Grocer, in Trouble

Marion (Ind.) Retailer Who Tried to Run His Store "as Christ Would Have Done It," and Who is Just Emerging from Financial Difficulty, Sends "Grocery World" a Statement of His Condition.

The hundreds of grocers who ave read the "Grocery World" ntinuously for many years will member A. F. Norton, grocer, Marion, Ind., who became mous several years ago for try-g to run his store "as Christ uld have done it," and who in rrying out his plans perpetrated l sorts of unique stunts.

For several months Mr. Norton s been in financial difficulties. e added two stores to his iginal one, and ran the whole ree, all "as Christ would have me." The entire three became volved, and Mr. Norton went rough bankruptcy. During the st week he has sent the "Gro-ry World" a statement cover-g a brief story of his life and e present status of his business. It is reproduced in full as re-aling some of the man's pecul-ities:—

I was born in England, County of ssex, in 1846; made of the best aterial in that country. Took pas-age on a sailing vessel at Liverpool or New York City. Lacked only our days of being a year in crossing he Atlantic Ocean. Was cast on an sland and lived among the Portu-uese several months. Shipwrecked wice, lost my cap, kept my head bove the waves and landed in New ork City. Settled in the woods in rant County, Indiana. Helped to arry the clapboards to cover the rst cabin we lived in.

Enlisted in the war of '61 under eneral Ambrose E. Burnside, erved out my time and got what ey call an honorable discharge. ame home, ate a few square meals, e-enlisted under General W. T. herman; stayed with him on the March to the Sea," "On to Rich-ond," etc., and received another onorable discharge. They say I m entitled to a pension, but now eing convinced that it is wrong to ill or try to kill anyone, I will not ccept a pension for having made ch an effort in the past. Jesus id, "Love your enemies."

At the close of the war, came back Grant County, bought eighty res of land in the green, and dead-ed and cleared about forty acres. Married one of the best women in the world; have only one wife, and no special lovers. Lived about two years on the farm, then moved to Fairmount, Indiana. Worked in the post-office and grocery store for Ephriam Wilson, brother to our court house John Wilson. Mr. Wilson was a very nice man to work for, and after remaining with him for some time, started in business for myself.

With $800 in thirteen months, cleared $2,035, without hiring a clerk; and my competitors said I sold too cheap. Have been in public business over thirty-one years, and in twenty-nine years or more never bought a dollar's worth of goods without paying for it 100 cents on the dollar. If I owe anyone a dollar for goods bought in that time, stand up. I want to see you.

On or about January 10, 1906, about ten lawyers, three judges and two policemen came to me and commanded me to turn over all I had, saying, "You are a bankrupt, and cannot pay over 30 cents on the dollar, and we don't believe you can pay that much." I told them I had always paid my bills in full, and if they would act wisely and let me alone I would pay all. Some of my creditors wanted to give me a chance, but some of the lawyers were like a lot of sea gulls following a vessel on the high seas, tumbling over one another for all that was thrown overboard, and shrieking because more was not thrown over.

The creditors said, "We will invoice all you have and for 30 cents on the dollar we will receipt you in full, and all that remains over and above 30 cents on the dollar will be yours, though we do not believe there will be anything over." I had three stores running at that time, and after invoicing all I had, one store more than paid all they asked. I was given receipts in full for all I owed, and was exempted from any further payment according to law and agreement. In spite of this, however, I have paid to a part of these same creditors who had receipted me in full a total sum additional of $2,255.69, and for this amount I also have their receipts.

I wish now to say that if all my creditors will meet and a majority of them decide that they can handle what I have to a better advantage than I am doing, I will turn over every dollar in money and all property I have for them to use as they will. I will then sing the doxology and start new again.

With love and best wishes for all, I am yours for the Truth and the Life,

A. F. Norton.

The Hotel Patrons' Demand

A coffee that satisfies on a hotel table is a good coffee and will stand up under any test you can give it.

That's because hotel patrons are supercritical. They expect more than they get at home; in fact they expect perfection.

Hotel Astor Coffee is the year-in-and-year-out brand of some of the most exclusive hotels in New York City. They never think of buying anything else — they wouldn't dream of it.

The success of this coffee under this exacting test is really the reason that led us to push it through the grocery trade. We have a plan to increase your high-grade coffee trade. May we tell you about it? A postal request is enough.

To Gimbel Brothers.

The page advertisement of Gimbel Bros., published in all of last Wednesday's Philadelphia papers, contained the following:—

Every line of business has its trade journals or organs—as the "Iron Age," the "Dry Goods Economist." In most lines the leading journal is big, broad, representative, enlightening. Take the "Dry Goods Economist"—strong to the point of opposing a large class of its patrons (the cotton goods men) in their maddening advance of prices.

In Philadelphia the grocery trade has the "Grocery World" as its organ, but, unlike the "Dry Goods Economist" and the "Iron Age," it seems not always to stand up nobly for the best. It is a strong champion for glucose, which Dr. Leffmann says would not exist were it not chiefly and so largely used as an adulterant.

In its issue of last Saturday the "Grocery World" takes exception to the statement of the Heinz pickle people that any food can be packed without preservatives.

In other words, the "Grocery World" seems to stand for the old regime of crooked goods—as against the campaigns of Nations and States.

Crooked (and by "crooked" we mean also to include unrighteously cheapened) goods must go.

We present this picture to show that our stand for decent foods and drinks is not sustained in quarters that should champion the best.

You are right, Messrs. Gimbel. Your "stand" is not sustained by the "Grocery World," and very well do you know why. It is because you are wholly insincere. Any concern attacking glucose in candy while pushing it in syrup, as you have done and still do, is a conscienceless hypocrite. That is why the "Grocery World" does not sustain your "stand"—because it does not trust it. It is a false stand; an unscrupulous pose.

As to this journal's attitude toward the general glucose question, you lie when you insinuate that the "Grocery World" champions the use of glucose for adulteration or fails to "stand up nobly for the best." The controversy between you and us has not even touched the use of glucose for adulteration—it has hinged on whether you were just and honest in attacking the minimum use of glucose in candy, not for adulteration, but to perform a necessary office. We said and still say you were not, because every candy manufacturer in business agrees that glucose or some other foreign substance is necessary in certain candies. You to-day are not handling these certain candies, because you cannot get them without glucose, not even from the most upright manufacturers in business. These men use glucose not because they want to, but because they have to. Furthermore, strange as this may seem to men like you, they do not lie.

But while this journal's attitude toward the general subject is not at issue, we will say this just to that point: that the "Grocery World" has always believed and repeatedly has said, that the use of glucose or any other substance for the purposes of illegal adulteration is indefensible and wrong; not wrong according to your standard, Messrs. Gimbel—because discovery means punishment, but ethically and morally wrong; a fraud upon one's fellow man to be avoided not simply to escape trouble, but to keep a clean conscience.

In our issue of last Saturday the "Grocery World" did not "take exception to the statement of the Heinz pickle people that any food can be packed without preservatives." That is another lie. Either you are without the intelligence to properly interpret our article, or you have deliberately distorted it, probably the latter. The "Grocery World" merely emphasized the fact that Heinz alone of all manufacturers took that stand, and that before other manufacturers were compelled to follow his lead he should be compelled to disclose how he does this thing that no competitor can do.

No, Messrs. Gimbel, the "Grocery World" does not "stand for the old regime of crooked goods." It stands for honesty in advertising; it stands for some measure which will compel greedy and unscrupulous department store keepers, absolutely without principle save that of expediency, from posing before the public as the saviours of the food trade in refusing to sell a certain recognized article of food when they are in fact selling the very article in another form. It stands for some curb upon the slimy slurring of competitors—the making of all manner of foul insinuations against their honesty and their uprightness, such as you have constantly made against the grocers of Philadelphia, many of whom are overwhelmingly your moral and mental superiors. That is what the "Grocery World" stands for, Messrs. Gimbel—honesty, fairness and frankness in business. You will not be impressed with this platform; very probably you will pooh-pooh it. But that is simply because you cannot understand it.

The H.-O. Collapse.

A most significant incident is the passing of the H.-O. Co., of Buffalo, N. Y., into a receiver's hands with debts aggregating nearly $3,000,000. With it went all of its auxiliary companies, whose business affairs were inextricably tangled with its own.

The moral here is that advertising alone cannot carry a business. Years ago the H.-O. Co. was prosperous. Its leader was H.-O. (Hornsby's oatmeal), which without doubt was the finest of all oatmeals and sold at the highest price. The trade was not enormous, but steady and profitable.

Then the concern got into the freak breakfast food business with "Force" and a lot of other brands, and from that time to its receivership this old and formerly staid concern wore the cap and bells of a clown. The air was full of the gibberings of Sunny Jim. Its advertising was loud-mouthed and extravagant, and while people were for a time diverted, and unquestionably did buy "Force" in enormous quantities, the demand soon waned with the waning of fitful public attention, and in the end ceased almost entirely. This does not mean that "Force" was not good; it was good, but not so good as the advertisements represented it to be. No human food yet discovered is or can be any good, in fact.

It is simply another proof that the best advertising is not necessarily the kind that people talk most about.

Too Wild.

The president of the National Retail Grocers' Association grows illogical and frenzied when he paints a picture in another column of the complete destruction of 10,000 jobbing houses by the passage of a parcels post law which he thinks would foster the mail-order houses. Admittedly the picture is vivid. "This would mean 500,000 salesmen and employees thrown out of employment," he says. "It is estimated that there are over 200,000 retailers in the United States alone. Suppose that they were all put out of business? If the traveling men were taken off the road what would become of the hotels and livery stables? What would the railroads lose? What would the retailer lose?"

It doesn't help the situation to view the prospect through magnifying glasses. Not even a quadrupling of mail-order power and influence could bring anything like this to pass. Hundreds and thousands of people could never be hired to patronize a mail-order house at all, no matter how easy a parcels post law made it to do so, and those that do or would patronize it can do so for comparatively few articles.

Be sane, Mr. President, be sane.

Ignorance.

The "Grocery World" can scarcely believe that H. O. Wilkie, of Amsterdam, N. Y., president of the New York State Retail Grocers' Association, ever perpetrated the asinine statement credited to him in the following alleged interview in the New York "Retail Grocers' Advocate":

The pure food law is beginning to open the eyes of the public to a good many things. Take for instance the matter of coffee. For years the popular blend has been Mocha and Java, so-called. It surprises the people who have been buying this blend to learn that they have never had the smallest particle of either Mocha or Java. They have been buying Brazilian, or Rio, coffee, as it is generally called, only it was put up under the names of the other brands. The prices usually paid for coffee range from 20 to 35 and 40 cents, but genuine Mocha or Java cannot be purchased for less than 75 cents or $1 a pound. The supply of these coffees in the market is very small compared with that of the Brazilian coffee. The pure food law requires that food shall not be given names to which they are not entitled. Therefore Rio coffee cannot be sold as Java or Mocha.

If Mr. Wilkie really said this —and if he didn't he should make he "Retail Grocers' Advocate" apologize—he reveals himself as n ignoramus of unusual attainnents. To the best of the "Grocery World's" knowledge and beief, no living grocer has ever sold pound of Rio coffee either for Mocha or Java. The two varieties re so radically dissimilar that hey could not be sold for each ther. The very thought of a rinker of Mocha or Java getting Rio and being satisfied with it is oo utterly preposterous to discuss.

Likewise the statement that genuine Mocha or Java costs 75 ents or $1 per pound. This is ven sillier than the other, because nstantaneously disproved by any narket report. The smallest groer in business can afford to sell traight Mocha and Java at 35 ents a pound, and if Mr. Wilkie loesn't know that he doesn't now his business.

Dr. Wiley, Return!

What a fearful calamity that Dr. H. W. Wiley, Government chemist, should have chosen this time to be in Europe! Something has happened in the West which calls urgently for him, and which he alone can settle. It is pure food problem precisely in ne with those which this chemal Sherlock Holmes so often aised and discussed with such ignal ability, notably the problem f the imitation lamb chop, and o on.

In St. Louis a Miss Margaret Rice has just been joined in matrimony with Mr. Thomas Coffee—most remarkable complication, nd one leading straight to the uery: What shall the children e named? According to physicians, the sex of children is largely determined by the dominant characteristics of the parents. If the father dominates the mother, the child will probably be a boy; if the mother dominates, a girl.

Now, this vexatious St. Louis problem sets itself on the blackboard thus: If the children of this couple are girls, which means that they will contain more Rice than Coffee, must they not, under Dr. Wiley's rulings in cases just as important as this, be called Rice instead of Coffee? Naturally if the offspring are boys, they will contain more Coffee than Rice, and the problem will settle itself; it will then be perfectly legal to call them Coffee. But there is a worrying chance here that will make us all uneasy until Dr. Wiley returns and takes the matter up. Some others of us can wrestle with the lesser tangles of the pure food question, but these major problems fall peculiarly within Dr. Wiley's mighty brain.

Dr. Wiley, won't you please come home?

The Sheep and the Goats.

"Boyd's City Dispatch," a concern which sells lists of classified names, sends the "Grocery World" this week a proposition covering lists of grocers. The list is subdivided in a way which interestingly reveals several things, notably the number of grocers in business in the United States and the proportion of these which can be considered "prominent." This is at least a partial glimpse of ourselves as others see us.

According to Boyd there are 270 fancy grocers doing business in the large cities, 25,515 "responsible" retailers doing business everywhere and 2,478 who are "prominent." One hundred and forty-four grocers operate several stores each, after the manner of the Acme Tea Co., in Philadelphia.

The classification of wholesale grocers is even more interesting, because it goes further. It seems that there are 5,519 ordinary wholesale grocers in business, of which 3,106 are "prominent" and 1,647 "wealthy"! The 1,647, of course, are those doing the bulk of the wholesale sugar business.

In the same connection it is interesting to note that 1,173 wholesale grocers sell liquor, that 351 retailers handle liquor in the city of New York alone, and that 412 department stores have grocery departments. Upon noting the last-cited fact, the writer turned to see if the 412 grocery-selling department stores were also named under the hot-air department, but found no such classification. Even more strangely, there is no special mention for Gimbel Bros.

Concerning Gimbel Bros., this list is an exceedingly useful thing, for it enables us to know definitely that there are just 25,513 poorer grocery stores than theirs in the United States.

Another Year of High Canned Peaches.

Some Baltimore Packers Open Prices from Twenty to Twenty-five Cents Above Last Year. Short Crop the Cause.

An indication of what Eastern canned peaches are likely to do this year is given by some future prices named during the week past by certain Baltimore packers. These prices are as follows: $1.40 for seconds, $1.60 for standards, and $1.85 for extras.

All these prices are from 20 to 25 cents above last year, though about on a par with the present spot prices. In the years when the peach crop amounted to something, however, the selling prices of the canned article ruled far below these. In those days, which, after all, are not so distant, seconds Eastern peaches ruled from 85 cents to $1, and standards from $1.15 to $1.20.

There is no hope of any recession from the present high market for canned Eastern peaches until the crop amounts to more than it will this year.

Magazine Notes.

Those who have been or are going abroad this summer will find Arthur Stanley Riggs' story, "The Full Moon of Righteousness," in the August "Lippincott's," of especial interest to them. It depicts the strange "scrape" gotten into by an American girl through the too free use of a camera on shipboard, and may prove a warning to the tourist photographically inclined. "Cousin Christopher," a story by Johnson Morton, in the same magazine, should also appeal forcibly to the summer traveller, for it tells of the strange experiences of two young Americans while touring the Continent. "When Spring Comes Late," the complete novel, is by Marie Van Vorst. It is sure to be liked by both the traveller and the stay-at-home. Carolyn Wells, Will Levington Comfort, Mrs. John Van Vorst, Sarah Chichester Page, Prince Vladimir Vaniatsky, Edwin L. Sabin and Clifford Howard are a few of the other contributors to this exceptionally interesting and well-balanced magazine.

The New York Letter

Grocers' Legislative Bills Fail. Closer Enforcement of Full Weight Laws. State Food Show Coming On. Small Items of Trade News.

Special correspondence of "Grocery World."

New York, Aug. 2, 1907.

The two bills in which grocers had chief interest during the recent legislative session have failed to become laws. The grocers, through the local and State organizations, made hard fights at Albany for both the pure food bill and the wife's liability bill, and were successful in getting both through the Legislature, but Governor Hughes interposed vetoes on the last of the thirty days allowed him for the consideration of the measures passed by the Legislature.

Last Saturday, when it became known that the bills had been killed, the grocers sent to Albany to learn the reasons for the Governor's disapproval. Why he vetoed the wife's liability bill is not yet been made known here. It may be that no veto message was written, as the Governor has the power to allow bills to die by simply withholding his approval. So strong is the confidence of business men in the present Governor that on all sides the opinion was expressed that whatever were the reasons, they were honest and manly.

The objections of the Governor to the food bill, as reported, were more to the form than to the spirit of the measure. It is said that he would have approved the bill if it had been drawn somewhat differently, as its general scope was agreeable to his ideas.

That there is disappointment over the fate of the bills is clear, and the general disposition seems to be that in another year bills should be framed in such a way as to meet the objections raised by the Governor to the bills that are now dead. L. J. Callanan, who is collecting information on the subject for the New York Retail Grocers' Union, said:—

"Another veto which bears heavily on the retail business men of this State is that of the bill introduced by Mr. Cunningham, known as the Wife's Liability Bill. After many years of effort it reached the Governor, who did not sign it. Up to this time I have not heard his reason for not signing it, but there may be reasons which, as a lawyer, were apparent to him, but which we, as business men, failed to see. We know the fact that there is a wide-open doorway by which we can be cheated out of the goods furnished in good faith, which are used for the comfort and support of the family of which the wife is one of the heads.

"It will be hard to convince us that we are wrong in demanding that the wife, if she has the means, should be compelled to pay for goods which are necessary for the support of herself and the family.

"When we get the memorandum, which I suppose is filed with the bill, we will have a bill framed to meet the Governor's objections, and will have it introduced at the next session of the Legislature. I am told that in Iowa and Illinois they have a law which provides that the expenses of the family, and the education and care of the children, shall be a charge on the property of both husband and wife, or either of them, in favor of the creditors, and in relation thereto the husband and wife may be sued jointly or separately.

"The veto of the pure food law was a great blow to the business men of the State of New York who trade in the goods it covered. Every respectable busines man advocated its passage. Every business man expected the Governor to sign it. While we bow to his will and his judgment, we believe that he made a mistake in not signing it. If defects were found in it they could be remedied at the next session of the Legislature. It leaves all the work to be done over again with a long pull, a strong pull and a pull together. It can be passed with amendments to cover the Governor's objections."

Among the measures to which no particular public attention was given, but which became a law several weeks ago was one increasing the powers of Fritz Reichmann, the State Superintendent of Weights and Measures, and a somewhat adequate appropriation was made to carry on his work. Formerly he received $300 a year and few people knew that there was such an office. Now he is to get $1,500 a year and money is provided for traveling, printing and other expenses.

The superintendent's work is to consist largely in visiting cities outside of New York, and when he finds the State law on weights and measures is being disregarded to report the facts with his recommendations to the Legislature. In cities and towns which have no official sealers, he will advise the local authorities to create such an office.

Sunday morning members of the New York Retail Grocers' Union and members of their families at least 100 strong will start on a special train for Elmira where the annual convention of the New York State Association of Retail Grocers will be held from Monday to Thursday. The speakers at the convention will include Secretary John A. Green of the National Association, who will talk on organization; former secretary, Fred. Mason; L. J. Callanan, New York, who will tell of his 60 years' experience in the business; the presidents of nearly all the local grocers' societies also several former presidents A. E. Landon, of the American Sales Book Co., who will speak on "The Retailer is King," and others.

The food show of the State society at Elmira is now well underway and reports from that city indicate that it is an excellent exhibition. It will continue to August 10th. Some of the exhibitors are:—

B. T. Babbitt Co., New York; Washburn-Crosby Co., Minneapolis, Minn.; Chase-Hibbard Milling Co., Elmira; American Sales Book Co., Elmira; Woodcock Macaroni Co., Rochester; Maple Flake Co., Battle Creek, Mich.; Egg-O-See Co., Buffalo; Borden's Condensed Milk Co., New York; Frank E. Harris, Binghamton; Standard Oil Co., Elmira; the Fleischmann Co., New York; Star Egg Carrier Co., Rochester; McCaskey Register Co., Alliance, Ohio; A. J. Deer Co., Buffalo; Sea Foam Baking Powder Co., New York; C. M. & R. Tompkins, Elmira; Chris

Hansen's Laboratory, Little Falls; Egg Baking Powder Co., New York; R. T. Booth Co., Elmira.

Two grocers were among the losers by the fire which early last Sunday morning destroyed several acres of frame buildings at Coney Island. Thomas Blythe, who had a store in Surf avenue, estimates his loss at $6,000. Antonio Cilento, who had a store on the same street, places his loss at $5,000. There was no insurance, it is said.

Another fire, several days ago, almost destroyed the building at Fifth avenue and Forty-second street, in which Acker, Merrall & Condit have one of their chain of stores.

A petition in involuntary bankruptcy was filed Saturday against S. B. Clark, Inc., a cracker manufacturer at 494 Grand street, by several creditors, including the Greenwich Bank, which has a claim for $19,258. Frank Broaker, the vice-president, was appointed receiver. The company's capital stock is $100,000 and its liabilities are said to be about $47,000. Harry E. Clark, the president, received the control of the business from his father.

Another suit has been started for alleged substitution of other products in place of Hostetter's Bitters. The manufacturers claim that David Pariser, 417 Broadway, Brooklyn, has been selling in bulk a substitute that afterward was packed in the company's old bottles.

Jobbers are now worrying because the California fruit growers are not so ready as they at first seemed to give guarantees of the product in accordance with the Federal food law, the change of front being brought about after reflecting on the decision of the authorities at Washington as to the use of sulphur. The danger of confiscation of the fruit is said to loom before the Western men. According to large dealers, a certain amount of demoralization in the trade is a consequence.

By a large majority vote the Mercantile Exchange decided yesterday not to appeal from the recent decision of the Supreme Court condemning the old method of giving out butter quotations and ordering a reform so that the quotations be made truthful. Before the vote was taken several of the most prominent members made speeches, declaring that the Exchange had been disgraced in a public manner and that the sooner the orders of the court were obeyed the better it would be for the organization. Members say that their vote against an appeal means the end of the system which permitted the rigging of the market in the interest of any dealer or of any clique.

Invitations are being sent out for the annual Tobacco Trades Exposition to be conducted September 2d to 14th in the Madison Square Garden. The preparations, as usual, are made on an elaborate scale.

RICHMOND HOUSE WINS HIGH HONOR.

Sauer's Extracts, Prize Winners at Brussels Are Used in Jerusalem.

C. F. Sauer, of the C. F. Sauer Co., this morning received a letter and certificate from M. Bereki, Commissioner-General of the International Exposition being held in Brussels, Belgium, announcing that his company had been awarded the highest possible honors for all flavoring extracts. The award was made by a special jury. The prizes are a certificate of merit and purity, gold medal and cross of honor, the latter being the highest award offered to any exhibitor.

Mr. Sauer says he is a firm believer in the old adage: "It never rains but it pours," and in proof of this belief showed a letter, which came to him in the same mail, from D. W. Sims, formerly of Richmond, who is traveling as a representative of Pine Street Baptist Church, with the International Sunday School Board. The letter came from the Hotel De France, Jerusalem. After saying that ice cream was unknown in Egypt and the country roundabout the Mediterranean, except rarely and then of the poorest quality, he was much surprised to get some excellent vanilla cream for dinner in this hotel. Mr. Sims said that the party of American tourists, of which he was a member, was delighted with the cream and inquired how it was made. The proprietors said that it was made from extract made by the C. F. Sauer Co., in Richmond, Va. This statement, backed by proof of several extract bottles bearing the name and trademark of the Richmond company, 10,000 miles from home, made all members of the party sit up and take notice.

C. F. Sauer took the employees of the company to the Jamestown Exposition for the Fourth of July. The party traveled there and back in a coach which they had all to themselves.—Richmond, Va., "New's Leader."

The American public demands the best of everything. That's why Snider's Catsup is such a favorite. The number of bottles of Snider's Catsup consumed annually runs into the millions.

We Can Show You How to Increase Your Business

If you walked down Market or Chestnut Streets at night and one window in a block was brilliantly illuminated, while the rest were in darkness, which would you stop to look at? The lighted one most certainly. If that window displayed goods you needed at a low price, that store would impress itself upon you and most likely you would go back and buy when it was open—because an impression would be made on you.

Did it ever strike you that if you lighted your store window up at night after you closed and exhibited something in it that would attract attention, that passers-by would remember your place and come in when you opened up, to get what you offered, particularly if nearby competitors left their windows in darkness?

If it seems like an unnecessary expense to light your windows when your store is closed, write or phone us and we will show you that you can make up what it will cost you for a month, in one day's new business.

Window-Dressing Articles Wanted

For several months the "Grocery World" has been looking fo the right man to take charge of its "Window-Dressing Department and contribute a good, suggestive weekly article. We have trie several, but none was exactly what was wanted.

We will now attempt to get these articles from our subscribers probably every one of whom has some technical knowledge of win dow-dressing. What we want is articles clearly describing windo displays that can be made by the average retailer; not necessarily new or original—in fact, those which have been used successfully ar perhaps preferable to all others.

For all acceptable articles, the "Grocery World" will pay a average price of $5 each. All matter sent in under this arrangemen should be addressed to the "Window-Dressing Department." I drawings are also sent they should be made throughout in black ink (not pencil).

THE GROCERY MARKETS

Tea.

The tea market is unchanged and only fairly active. The demand is fair, considering the season, but no more than fair. No changes have occurred since the last report, and in practically every respect the situation, both as to prices and conditions, is precisely the same as last week. Japans are getting somewhat scarce, and the market shows some little stiffness, though without quotable change.

Coffee.

The market for Rio and Santos coffee has fluctuated considerably during the past week, first declining and then advancing. The week closes about unchanged from last week. The demand is for actual wants only, and while the wants are probably normal with the season, the aggregate is comparatively light. Mild coffees are steady and unchanged, with the exception of Maracaibos, which on account of the light arrivals of new crop, have stiffened up considerably. Mocha is steady and unchanged, and Java firm and advancing.

Syrup and Molasses.

Glucose shows no change for the week. Compound syrup is unchanged and in fair demand. Sugar syrup is in ordinary demand at unchanged prices. Molasses is equally dull and prices are unchanged. Prospects for the new crop are good.

Sugar.

The raw sugar market has stiffened considerably during the past week, due to firmness in Europe produced by news of crop damage. The refined sugar situation is unchanged. The Federal refinery is 10 points below the others, and this is having an unsettling influence. No advance is expected in the near future, though the matter is entirely in the refiners' hands. Refined sugar is in very fair demand.

Fish.

The fish market shows some activity. Shore mackerel are wanted; the supply is still small and the price gradually advancing as the quality improves. New Irish mackerel are coming forward more freely and rule at about unchanged prices. New Norways are also offered, but the quality is scarcely satisfactory and prices are comparatively low. Cod, hake and haddock are dull and unchanged. Sardines are in fair demand, both foreign and domestic, and rule at unchanged prices. There has been some talk of an advance in domestic sardines, but it has not materialized as yet. Salmon is unchanged, steady and in fair demand. Future prices have not been named on any other grade except Columbia River as yet.

Canned Goods.

Spot tomatoes seem to have weakened somewhat during the week. Full standards in quantity certainly large enough for the demand are now offered at 90 cents, f. o. b. Most of these are 1905 goods, however, as 1906 pack are scarce. New pack 2 pounds are offered for immediate shipment at 67½ cents, which is much below the spot price. The quality, however, is poorer than the spot goods. Future tomatoes are weaker also, and offers of 82½ cents are now finding much more or in the packers' eyes. ere is some little interest on yers' part in this latest decline. rn is dull and unchanged. The eage for this season is cut wn, but the outlook is for a y fair pack. Peas are unnged, but strong, especially for large sizes, which are scarce. e pack everywhere seems to be ning to small sizes. Anything und 90 cents in a large way is rce. New prices have been ned on future Baltimore aches, as reported elsewhere. ey are very high and have used no interest as yet. Apples unchanged and dull. The lifornia canned goods packers ve withdrawn everything save ra cherries, extra apricots, awberries and grapes, which v buyers want. The Baltimore e is unchanged and quiet.

Dried Fruits.

Very few spot prunes are sell- in this market, but other marts report a better trade. Prices unchanged. Futures show ne signs of advance, owing to l crop conditions on the coast. aches are unchanged and still e high and scarce. The dend is practically nil. Currants holding their own at unanged prices. The demand is r. Raisins are scarce and stiff. ree-crown loose have sold on ot at 9¾ to 10½ cents per und in a large way. Seeded nge from 12½ to 13 cents, which considerably above the future rket. Apricots show no ange. Apples are firm and gh, the market being from 1 to cents above normal.

Beans and Peas.

Pea beans are unchanged and demand is very slow. The uation is a little firmer in chigan, but not much. Marws are unchanged and in slow mand. California limas are untled. The coast market is unanged, but some holders in the condary markets have cut their ices 10 to 15 cents below the ast. Split peas are in excellent mand at unchanged prices. his refers to yellows, as greens about out of the market.

Butter.

The butter market is firm on a sis about 1 cent below a week o. Creameries continue to ake good butter, and the conmptive and speculative demand th continue good considering the high prices prevalent for the season. The stocks in storage are not as large as a year ago, and the present outlook points to no lower prices in the near future, unless there is extreme hot weather and goods decline in quality. The make of near-by butter is very short, and will probably get shorter as the summer advances. The Western make is about normal for the season.

Eggs.

The egg market is firm at an advance of about 1 cent per dozen. The advance is due to the extreme scarcity of fancy eggs. The bulk of the receipts are showing the effects of the heat and have to be sold at prices ranging from 2 to 5 cents below fresh. Stocks of eggs in storage are very heavy, but as they were put in at high prices, when eggs were fancy, the market must advance at least 2 cents more before fancy eggs come out.

Cheese.

The cheese market has declined ¼ cent per pound, due to the quality of the cheese arriving, which shows summer defects and is only good for immediate consumption. The make of cheese is about normal, and there will probably be no change in price until September, after which there may be an advance. Stocks of June cheese are considerably below a year ago, and the consumptive demand is better than for some years. The make of September cheese will govern the future price.

Provisions.

The market for smoked meats has been about stationary during the week, and the usual summer advance has up to the present failed to materialize. The consumptive demand for hams of all grades, bellies and bacon is normal. Both pure and compound lard is unchanged in the East, but in the West there has been an advance of ¼ to ½ cent. Barrel pork, canned meats and dried beef are unchanged and in good consumptive demand.

Produce.

New potatoes, 40 to 45 cents per basket, good demand; No. 2s, 15 to 20 cents per basket, demand poor; cucumbers, 70 to 80 cents per basket, demand good; cabbage, 10 to 15 cents per basket, demand fair; squash, 25 to 30 cents per basket, demand good; peas, 50 to 90 cents per basket, demand good; string beans, green, 40 to 50 cents per basket; wax, 50 to 60 cents, demand good; yellow onions, 90 cents to $1 per basket, demand good; new carrots, 2 cents per bunch, demand good; scullions, $1 to $1.25 per 100, demand fair; beets, 1 to 2 cents per bunch, demand fair; turnips, white, 40 to 50 cents per basket, $2 to $2.50 per barrel, demand good; yellow, 30 to 40 cents per basket, demand fair; peppers, 60 to 75 cents per basket, demand good; eggplants, $1.25 to $1.40 per basket, demand good; lima beans, $1.75 to $2 per basket, demand good; spinach, $1.25 per barrel, scarce and good demand; salad, York State, $1.75 per box of two dozen, demand fair.

Ten to One

Green Fruit.

Bananas, firsts, $1.25 to $1.60 per bunch; 8-hands, $1 to $1.25; 7-hands, 65 to 85 cents; 6-hands, 40 to 60 cents; red, 75 cents to $2.50 per bunch, demand poor; lemons, $4.50 to $5.50 per box, demand fair to good; pineapples, $3.50 to $5 per box, demand fair to good; California oranges, $5.50 to $6.50 per box, demand poor; limes, 80 cents to $1 per 100, demand poor.

Nuts.

Peanuts, green, choice, 5½ cents per pound; fancy, 7 cents; jumbo, large, 8 cents; roasted, choice, $1.25 per bushel; fancy, $1.50; jumbo, large, $1.65, demand fair; Brazil nuts, 8½ cents per pound; filberts, 10½ cents; pecans, 16 cents; walnuts, marbots, 12½ cents; mixed nuts, 11½ cents, demand poor.

MARKET NOTES.

Georgia peaches show a wide range of price—50 cents to $3 per crate. The receipts show considerable rotten fruit. A few Delaware peaches are in market averaging $1 per basket. The demand for good peaches is good.

Georgia and Arizona are still shipping cantaloupes North. Georgias range from $1 to $2 and the best Arizonas bring $3.50. The demand is fair.

Georgia watermelons hold their price, ranging from 20 to 50 cents. The demand is fair.

Jersey tomatoes are gradually getting down and range from 50 cents to $1 per basket. The quality is fair and the demand is good. The crop is likely to be fair. Canners have begun to buy around 50 cents.

New apples are in market and are wanted to some extent at 35 to 50 cents per basket.

New Jersey corn ranges from 60 to 75 cents per basket and the demand is good, since the supply up to date is very small. Some North Carolina corn is still on the market.

The first New Jersey lima beans are in market and range from $2 to $2.50. A few North Carolina limas show the same range, but in one-third barrel baskets. The quality of the current receipts is only fair.

Fake Collection Agency Collapses.

Several months ago agents for the "Tyler Collection Co.," of Chicago, made contracts with a number of business men in Akron, Ohio, two of whom are grocers, to collect their accounts for a term of five years for a retaining fee of $40 down, $25 per year and a commission of 10 to 25 per cent. Members of the Akron Retail Grocers' Association asked their secretary for information concerning the Tyler agency, before making contracts, and the answer received was such that none of them invested. The two grocers who gave up $40 each to the agency have since joined the association. Messrs. Welty & Johnson, attorneys of Springfield, Ohio, some of whose clients had made contracts with the Tyler agency, started an investigation of the concern some weeks ago. The result of their investigation was that W. B. Tyler is spending the summer in jail in Springfield, while C. E. Andrews, who is also wanted for defrauding merchants in that city, has left for parts unknown.

Where Is Our Tea Trade Going To?

Chicago Tea Man Points Out That Each Year We Are Bringing Over Less Tea in All Lines, Asks What Is Becoming of the Business.

Where is the tea trade of the United States going to?

The increased population in this country has been most rapid (within the last ten years) and the import of teas to-day would necessarily have to show much larger quantities to equalize the per capita consumption of 1897, but notwithstanding, however, the import of China teas into the United States in 1904 totalled 53,146,080 pounds; in 1905, 42,938,984 pounds; in 1906, 37,466,689 pounds, thus showing a decrease in China teas in three years of 15,679,391 pounds.

The importation from Japan in 1904 totalled 42,711,127 pounds; in 1905, 41,823,115 pounds; in 1906, 37,806,414 pounds, showing a decrease in Japan tea during the same period of 4,904,713 pounds.

The importation of India and Ceylon teas in 1904 was 7,674,663 pounds; in 1905, 7,813,564 pounds; in 1906, 7,340,106 pounds, showing a decrease in India and Ceylon teas during the same period of 334,557 pounds. You will notice that in 1905 there was an increase over 1904 in the importation of India and Ceylon tea, when a decrease followed in 1906 which carried the number of pounds imported in 1906 below the importation of 1904.

The total importations from other Asiatic countries in 1904 was 450,922 pounds; in 1905, 658,076 pounds; in 1906, 456,731 pounds. The total imports from the United Kingdom, Canada and sundry other countries to the United States in 1904 shows a total of 8,915,224 pounds; in 1905, 9,472,860 pounds; in 1906, 10,551,810 pounds, an increase of 1,636,586 pounds. The grand total of all teas imported into the United States less tea exported therefrom in 1904 totalled 109,614,993 pounds; in 1905, 101,937,084 pounds; in 1906, 92,561,498 pounds.

In these days of extraordinary prosperity, in this period of strenuous commercialism, many firms are striving to introduce package teas, but notwithstanding the grand total decrease in the United States importations of tea within three years was 17,053,495 pounds.

Heart-to-Heart Talks With Grocery Clerks

"Mutual Aid Sheets" Which a Large Eastern Retail Grocer Tucks in Each Clerk's Weekly Pay Envelope. Some Advice From the Head of the House on Selling Goods and Other Subjects.

[The "Grocery World" has come into possession of a series of "Mutual Aid Sheets," which are weekly little talks issued regularly to its clerks by one of the large retail grocery stores of the East. The talks are typewritten and a copy is enclosed in each clerk's pay envelope. They are so soundly practical and so useful generally that it is this journal's purpose to publish them weekly or bi-weekly for the edification of other clerks as well as other grocers who have clerks.—ED.]

WARM WEATHER THOUGHTS.

You can increase your sales these days by keeping in mind the ready cooked things.

One thing you may bear in mind we will cook and deliver for an advance of 4 cents per pound any kind of a roast that is bought at our meat department. Make this a feature of your warm weather suggestions.

Refer to your typewritten list of delicatessen goods a few of the leaders in a few simple words, putting emphasis on the cleanly manner in which they are prepared, and mention also the tongue and chicken in glass that we have recently introduced and which will remain prominently displayed on the counter.

The summer beverages you will find on a separate list.

Canned baked beans from now on will be a good seller.

Show up the No. 3, 10-cent cans to the working people and say that they're the most nutritious and the most economical of summer foods.

Have the advertised beans right at your hand. It's no trouble to sell those that are so cleverly advertised in the magazines. Refer to the overhead fans and ask her if she doesn't think it's a pleasant change from the street heat.

Push one of the chairs near her and get her in good humor to open the pocketbook freely.

Nothing beats comfortable surroundings for taking good orders.

THE SCIENCE OF ADVERTISING

This Department is devoted to the criticism f advertising matter sent in, to the devising f new advertising ideas for special occasions, pon request, and to the suggesting of original dvertisements when data is supplied. All ommunications sent in for this Department hould be addressed to the Editor of Science f Advertising. They will be filed in their rder and taken up according to strict rotation.

There comes to this desk this veek from a Jamesburg (N. J.) rocer a sample blotter which he as used to advertise his business. he size is 3½ x 6¼ inches, and he blotter is the kind with thin lotting surface on one side and oated cardboard on the other—ery unsatisfactory blotters as a ule. The only real blotter to use n my judgment is the thick, fat ind that will drink up any kind f blot. Of course, this kind of lotter will not allow fine printng, as the surface is spongy.

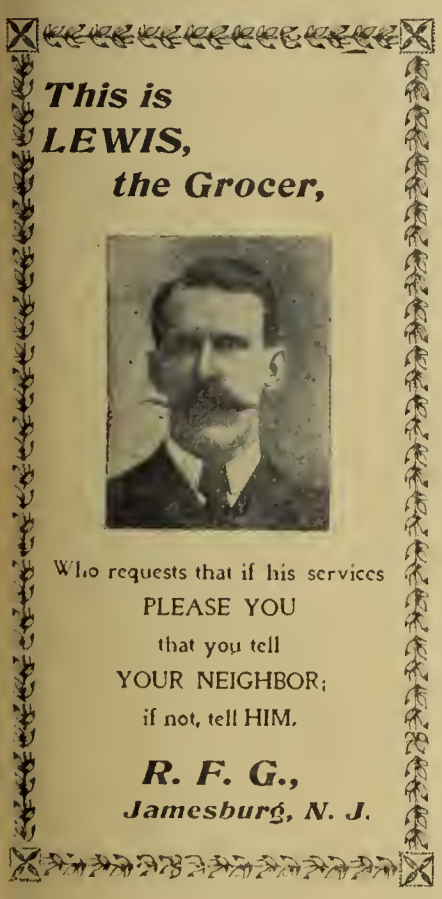
Here is a somewhat reduced eproduction of the blotter referred to:—



Let's discuss the photograph irst. I don't consider it any of ny business whether a man thinks t's good taste to use his picture n his advertising or not. That's is personal matter entirely. But rom an advertising standpoint I an't say that I consider it good, nd if it is desired to use a photoraph I can imagine a kind that vould prove much more striking han this. For example, the photographer might have taken this correspondent behind his counter, in the act of leaning over on one elbow as if talking earnestly with a customer. Or talking over the telephone, the blotter bearing the message in both cases. A photograph like either of these, or along the same line, would have had a novelty about it that would doubtless have gotten it much more attention than a conventional portrait. And then I should always word such advertisements as this in the first person singular—"I request," not "he requests."

I don't think much of the wording of this blotter. There was a time when it was snappy and epigrammatic, but so many thousands of people have used it that it has gotten stale. I should make an advertisement like this more personal and direct. Something like this:—

> The best thing I can say about my goods is that any time anything is wrong you can get your money back. More than that no man can do.

Little blotters like this can't move mountains, but they help a little. They can never take the place of real straightforward advertising, but they constitute a link in the chain if a man can afford to do both.

Pink Tape Sold the Celery.

How an English Farmer Gave His Produce a Boom. English Authority Uses Case as an Argument Why American Shippers Should Look to Their Packages. Jam in India.

Special correspondence of "Grocery World."

Washington, D. C.,
August 2, 1907.

Consul Albert Halstead, of Birmingham, reports that in the British market care in packing, attention to making products appear well, and, in general, everything calculated to attract the eye are of the greatest usefulness in promoting sales. The importance of this has been brought more clearly to his attention by an article in a British publication, from which he quotes the following:—

"The successful sale here of numerous continental articles of food is due almost entirely to the neatness of the container. Such things as fruit, eggs and vegetables, which come to us from the Continent, are neatly inclosed in boxes, and have apparently been washed before being packed. An edging of tinted or lace paper occasionally serves to make the produce more tempting to the purchaser. Home-grown produce is not, as a rule, so attractively displayed and in consequence does not always command the sale. As a guide to the American sending goods to this market, the following incident will be of interest, because it shows something of the spirit of the purchaser with reference to the way goods are offered for sale. A farmer noticed customers in the grocer's shop picking over the celery to find the best-looking bunches, and it occurred to him to take more pains with his celery and see if it would bring a better price. He bought some pink tape and tied the celery with it in neat bunches, and found that it sold quickly and brought more money, while the same kind of celery without the tape sold slowly and brought less.

"After that he marketed all his produce in the most attractive manner, putting labels on his fruit baskets with the name of the variety, wiping his apples, selecting and labeling his tomatoes, always treating his fruit and vegetables as if they were worthy of distinction. The fame of his produce grew, he enlarged his business and became a wealthy man, all because of the pink tape on the celery.

"The bottles, labels and other items connected with the packing of American proprietary medicines are much admired here, and the chemist readily concedes the fact that such matters are potent in assisting him to make sales. In considering this country as a market for American goods which reach the purchaser through retail shops and stores, I would advise the manufacturer to bear in mind the fact that the package forms an important detail in display either in windows or on the retailer's shelves."

An odd fact is that a particularly nice line of jams and jellies is packed in cans and bottles in the Himalaya Mountains. There are three factories engaged in this business in Simla, the summer capital of the British India Government. The largest of these has its factory east of Jokko Mountain, about four miles from Simla. This little factory turns out per annum the following quantities of 2-pound cans of jam:

Blackberry	75
Raspberry	25
Apple	10
Quince	20
Peach	50
Apricot	80
Green gage	30
Yellow plum	50
Damson	10
Pear	5
Guava	75
Lemon	10
Orange	25
Citron	5
Sweet slice	25

All of these retail at from $3.16 to $4.41 per dozen. Only the strawberry jam sells for the latter price, most of the others being $3.16 and $4 per dozen. The "mango chutney," put up in quart bottles, sells for $4 per dozen. That price makes them retail at 37, 33 and 28 cents per can and bottle.

The strawberries, blackberries, raspberries, apricots, green gages, yellow plums, lemons, citrons and mangoes are grown on the sides of the mountains about Simla by the natives. The apples, quinces, peaches, damsons and pears are grown 80 miles north of Simla, in the mountains at Kulu. The guavas and oranges come from the plains near Lahore.

The fruits from Kulu, 80 miles back in the mountains, are carried by coolies in baskets, which weigh each 60 pounds, strung over their backs. It requires four days for the coolies to make the trip in over the narrow, tortuous path from Kulu to Simla. For this they receive 24 cents a day. The path or road is owned by the Government, and two annas or 4 cents toll is charged. This is paid by the firm that buys the fruit. Men and women carry baskets of fruit, the women, as usual, receiving less than the men for the service.

The coolies who do the unskilled work of picking over the berries, peeling and seeding certain fruits, slicing mangoes, etc., receive from $3.35 to $4 per month, and board and lodge themselves. The jam makers receive from $10 to $13 per month, and board and lodge themselves. The latter are kept on the payroll the year round to keep them from revealing secrets of manufacture to competitors.

It is interesting to speculate how American manufacturers could compete with labor at these prices. HOLT.

Two-Minute Sermons for the Retail Grocer

IV.—A Good Business Letter or None.

Better write no letter than a poor letter.

Too many business letters are to-day failing in their mission. A business letter is the representative of the house sending it out, and should be so carefully worded that its meaning will be absolutely clear to the recipient. Too many business men are to-day striving to quickly clear their desks of all correspondence, and thus rush through their work, when they should strive to so write each letter that it will do the same work for the house that a special man would do if sent out instead of the letter.

The ordinary business correspondent does not stop here. He dictates his letters to a stenographer who probably does not know much about the business, and then does not read them over carefully to see that they express the exact thoughts that he wished to express. He drops into his chair a few moments before the letters should be mailed, hurriedly glances over them, and lets them go.

In the first place, the writer of a letter is very likely to not express his thoughts as clearly in a letter as if talking to the party addressed. Then there still remains the chance that the stenographer will, through misunderstanding or poor punctuation, put an entirely different meaning to the letter. Guard against both possibilities.

If you cannot give a letter enough attention to-day to make it clearly express your views, do not write it. Better wait another day to start than make a wrong start.

If your stenographer fails to express your meaning in the letter, correct it thoroughly and have it entirely rewritten, even though it is not started on its mission for another day. Better a little delay, if that is absolutely necessary, than the possibility of making a wrong impression. F. A. P.

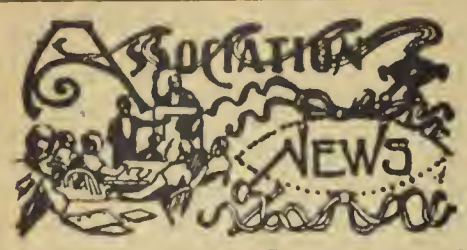
TOASTED CORN FLAKE CO. - BATTLE CREEK, MICH.



New Orleans, La.

Not content with the elimination of lagniappe, a form of gift-giving peculiar to New Orleans, the Retail Grocers' Association of that city has now engaged in a warfare against all other gift schemes. The association has sent out the following letter to all of its members:—

Dear Sir:—At the regular monthly meeting of the Retail Grocers' Association, Wednesday, June 19th, the giving of useful articles by grocers to their customers as advertising matter was taken up and discussed, and after careful consideration it was decided by all present that this practice should be discontinued. It has been our experience during the past week or two that where a grocer in a neighborhood was giving an article as an advertisement, even without the consumer making a purchase, other grocers in the vicinity of the grocer giving such advertising articles have construed it as lagniappe, and have gone back to the old practice of giving cakes and candies. These few cases which we speak of were promptly taken up by the association and the parties were induced for the sake of harmony to discontinue.

Therefore, we take this method of notifying you of the action taken by the association; also, of calling your attention to the original agreement to discontinue lagniappe, which included calendars, prize tickets, Christmas gifts and all other free gift schemes.

Furthermore, we wish to call your attention to a party who is soliciting orders for a local photograph establishment selling to the grocers tickets to be given to their customers, which the grocer punches when said customers make a purchase, and when the amount of $5 is purchased the party holding the ticket is entitled to a crayon picture upon payment of $1. This party is endeavoring to secure orders by misrepresentation, it is said, stating that his scheme has the indorsement of the Retail Grocers' Association. Therefore you are hereby notified that he has no right to use the name of this association in any manner.

Yours truly,
RETAIL GROCERS' ASSOCIATION.

Missouri.

The State Retail Grocers of Missouri held its annual convention at Sedalia, Mo., last week, and the business transacted finds a summary through the following resolutions adopted:—

Whereas, Many merchants have suffered great losses through the dishonesty of their debtors who have given them checks for their accounts or in exchange for cash, which are not paid by the bank on which drawn because of no funds; be it

Resolved, That the Legislative Committee of the Missouri Retail Merchants' Association is hereby instructed to prepare and have introduced at the next session of the Legislature a bill which will make it a misdemeanor for any person to issue a check when that person has not funds in bank to meet the check if he or she does not make good to the payee of such check the amount thereof within twenty-four hours after notification by the payee, the punishment to be a fine of not less than $25 or not less than ten days in jail, or both in flagrant cases.

Resolved, That we pledge our affiliation with the National Association of Retail Grocers and ratify the action of the last National Association:—

First, in advocating the equal rights of manufacturer, wholesaler and retailer.

Second, in the amendment of the National bankruptcy law, or else its repeal.

Third, favoring the Dixon Bill, giving the retail merchant the right to attach the wages of civil service employees for the necessaries of life.

Fourth, in favor of regulated credit and fair competition.

Fifth, in opposition to all premim schemes, trading stamps and similar attempts to get something for nothing.

Sixth, in opposition to all past attempts at parcels post legislation in favor of the catalogue houses.

Whereas, From the beginning of history humanity has been accorded one day in seven as a day of rest and recreation; and

Whereas, This custom has been recognized not only as a religious observance, but also from a hygienic standpoint; therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Legislature of Missouri repeal that clause of the statutes of Missouri which permits the sale of provisions on Sunday, commonly known as the Sabbath, and to enact such other legislation which will permit the merchants of this State to rest on Sunday.

Whereas, The present oleomargarine law placing a tax of one-quarter cent per pound on all uncolored oleomargarine and 10 cents a pound on all colored goods has proven not to benefit those for whose benefit it was passed becase of the strong temptation to violate its provisions, which practically places a premium on crime; and

Whereas, The Government is being largely defrauded of the tax by unscrupulous dealers who sell colored oleomargarine as butter in competition with the grocer who is not willing to do criminal acts in order to gain the profit which the illicit handler of oleomargarine gets; and

Whereas, Oleomargarine is an article of commerce which has proven not to be injurious to health, and is practically the labor man's butter, if sold without the present restrictions; therefore, be it

Resolved, That this convention heartily approves the movement started to obtain revision of the Federal laws governing the sale of this product, whereby the exorbitant tax on the colored oleomargarine be removed, and pledges its members to do all in their power to secure aid from Representatives and Senators in Congress to have such revision made at the next session that the grocer may no longer be cheated of his legitimate trade and the laboring man deprived of an article at a reasonable price through the laws as they now stand on the statute books.

German Department Stores Bitterly Antagonized.

The spread of department stores has been relatively much slower in Germany than in the United States, but they have awakened a much more bitter animosity on the part of many of the smaller dealers. The number of department stores in the German Empire increased from 82 in 1904 to 90 in 1906, a growth of not quite 10 per cent. During the same period large mercantile concerns (class 1 on the German

Window Dressing for Grocers

In this department from now on will appear each week suggestive articles regarding the proper use of the retail grocer's window. An endeavor will be made to deal with the subject practically, in other words, to show grocers how they can turn their windows into a money-making feature of their business. Subscribers are invited to make free use of the department by submitting both queries or suggestions.

Lard Display for Meat Market.

By CHARLES M. STEELE,
Assistant Advertising Manager National Cash Register Co.

This display is appropriate for a meat market and may be used either in summer or winter. If used in winter, the lard cans which are open and show lard should contain the real lard.

In case the display is used in summer, the same results can be accomplished by putting a false top in the lard can, and covering it with paraffin about ¾ inch or 1 inch thick. The paraffin gives the appearance of lard, and it is very hard to detect the difference.

The lard in the window may be any popular brand which is sold by the store using the display. Various sized cans should be shown arranged in the window as shown in the cut above.

The small pig can no doubt be secured from some bric-a-brac store or novelty house. They are made of papier-mache, and are used as candy boxes.

There is no expense attached to this window other than the card and the pig, unless you use paraffin, but this amounts to very little.

k list) have increased in number om 7,000 to 8,000, or 14 per cent. naller concerns (class 2 on the t) have increased from 11,000 12,300, or over 10 per cent. Dertment stores are now in 62 ies, against 60 in 1904. Not a v are evidently distinctly below e rank of large commercial ndertakings, as some 11 pay less an $1,200 tax annually. The owth of the business of department stores is more rapid than the simple increase in number, as these establishments paid 28 per cent. more tax in 1906 than in 1904. Business houses of class 1 show an increase in taxation of 23 per cent. for the same period. Evidently the trend is steadily toward proportionately greater power and control of the commercial situation on the part of the larger aggregations of capital.

Vants Periodic Meetings of Jobbers, Retailers and Manufacturers

ational Secretary Green Takes Up a Suggestion Along the Above Line and Supports It. Lead to Untangling of Trade Problems. Mail Order Trade Decreasing. National President Kramer's Strenuous Talk on Parcels Post Law.

ecial correspondence of "Grocery World."

Cleveland, Ohio,
August 2, 1907.

One of our exchanges in a cent issue makes the suggestion at a meeting of the representaves of retail grocers, wholesale rocers and manufacturers be eld some time in the near future. This we believe to be a move in ne right direction.

If such meetings could be rought about periodically there ould no doubt be a better underanding between the distributers food products in general lines. There has been and is at the resent time a systematic effort n the part of the National Vholesale Grocers' Association nd the National Association of etail Grocers to keep in the osest touch possible, and to ork for the benefit of the trade t large, and with a purpose of ettering conditions among the holesale and retail trade.

Could such arrangement be rought about as periodical meetngs with manufacturers, jobbers nd retailers, the beneficial results ould be very great, and possibly n the near future some effort may e put forth to bring this matter o a successful conclusion.

D. M. Carr, of Omaha, Neb., rites me as follows regarding he falling off in the mail-order usiness:—

> I notice from the report of Sears, Roebuck & Co., the Chicago mail-order house, for the past six months that there has been a heavy falling off in their gross sales during May and June.
> In May they did $37,251 less business than in May, 1906, and it is worth noticing that during June their gross sales amounted to $253,663 less than in June of last year.
> I am almost constrained to believe that the preaching of the home trade gospel in the country press has influenced business to a great extent.

National President Kramer has the following strong words to say regarding the effect of a parcels post law upon the ordinary retail business:—

> It will not only drive most of you out of business, but it will destroy the 10,000 wholesale houses whose sole occupation is to sell their goods to the retailers in small towns.
> Suppose we say that each of these houses employ fifty people, which is a very low estimate. This would mean 500,00 salesmen and employees thrown out of employment. It is estimated that there are over 200,000 retailers in the United States alone. Suppose that they were all put out of business. What would be the result? If the traveling men were taken off the road what would become of the hotels and livery stables? What would the railroads lose? What would the retailer lose? These, gentlemen, are all questions to be considered, and they are not theories, but they indicate just what will happen if the parcels post bill is passed. Use your efforts. Write to your congressmen. This bill, if passed, will make it possible for the mail-order houses to carry out the gigantic scheme that they have planned.

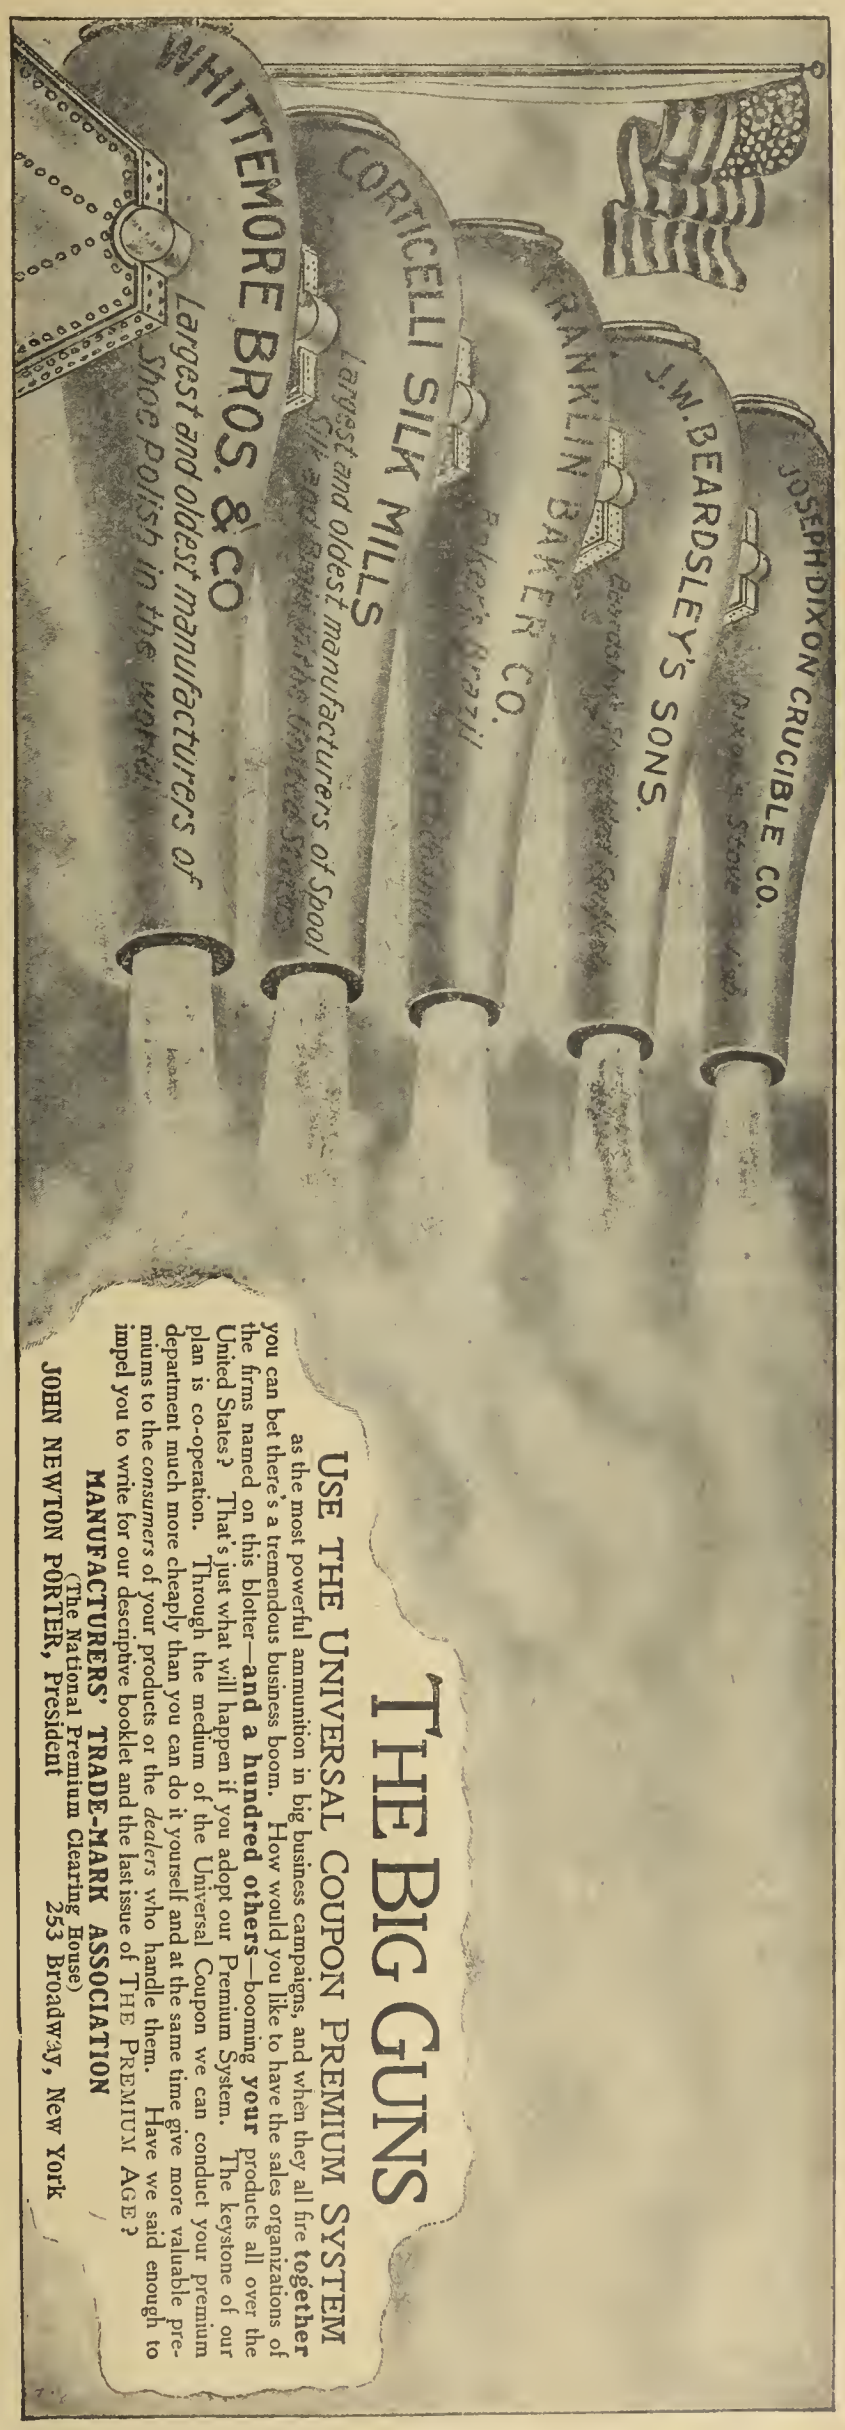
A Good Selling Point.

No stronger guarantee could be given than that of P. F. Brown & Co., of 39 South Front street, Philadelphia, in connection with their Gurnse butter. In a nutshell it is this: If not satisfactory return. Couldn't ask for much more, could you? Gurnse butter is extra fine creamery, in pound and half-pound prints, without garlic or grass, and is strictly first-class butter for good trade. You can make a leader of it.



The Wife.

Do you know, sometimes I wish females had never been invented.

They do make us lords of creation such a hen of a lot of trouble!

And, of course, we're never to blame; it's always their fault.

Seriously, I don't know when I've wanted to wring a human neck more than I did last week, when I was dragged against my will into an affair that's just happening over in New Jersey.

I don't like these family rows.

I've known this particular family for a long while and have always thought I had some influence with the man. He's a grocer and personally is an ordinary sort of fellow, though before this happened I always believed he had at least as much fidelity about him as a dog anyway.

Through some squabble he was about to leave his wife and I was asked to go down and see if I could do anything.

This is a man about 47 years old. He started in the grocery business in this town about thirteen years ago, and the same year he married his present wife. She was a German girl about his own age, and as solid and hard-working as they make 'em.

That woman had every bit as much to do with building up that business as her husband.

Though they both worked hard and built up a good trade from nothing.

She kept the books and tended store and particularly to a little delicatessen department they had, and simply made herself a mighty valuable partner.

They never had any children, so she had nothing to interfere with her.

I say again I think at least half the credit of the present fine condition of that store belongs to her.

Yet her nincompoop of a husband has gotten tired of her and is after somebody else.

I know the other woman in the case very slightly. That is I know her by sight and I've heard a little about her disposition.

She doesn't compare at any point with the wife. She's no kind of a looker, she's gotten a rotten temper, and all told she's a creature that you wouldn't think any man would look at twice if he could get the other one.

I said to the husband:—

"Good lord, Ed., what can you see in her to take you away from your wife? She isn't in it in anyway with her!"

He didn't know—had nothing to say; it was just infatuation.

Then I appealed to his loyalty.

"Why, a dog wouldn't do what you're doing!" I said. "Here's a good woman who stood by you and worked like a nigger when you had nothing! She helped build up your business and worked just as hard as you did. Now that you've got the fruits of her work you're going to throw her down. No white man could do a thing like that!"

He had nothing to say, except to mumble an accusation that she used to nag him all the time.

"Well, what if she did?" I said, "didn't she pay in work for the privilege? I don't like nagging women any better than you do, but if she nagged you there was probably reason for it. And anyway, she's done enough for you to wipe out the nagging!"

I saw I wasn't making any impression so pretty soon I shut up. That fool sold out his business shortly after that and left town. Everybody said he met the other woman outside and is living with her to-day. For my part I don't doubt it in the least; he had it coming to him and he got it.

Ain't this blind infatuation the most remarkable thing you ever saw? You see a fellow with a fine wife—handsome and apparently congenial in every way—get fairly stuck on some old tad that you'd think would turn his stomach. Of course, there's some excuse for a man like me, constantly run after by women. But very few have the excuse I do.

By gad, I think if any man ought to be faithful to his wife it's the grocer whose wife actually works with him in his business, as thousands of 'em do. Understand, all grocers' wives can't do that and I ain't reflecting on those

What sort of coffee do you sell? Is there anything distinctive about it? Have you got a single line in your coffee department that is outside the conventional coffee that everybody sells?

If the answer to these questions is no, as it probably is, it explains why you aren't selling more coffee. Add our German-American Coffees to your line and see the difference. They are different. They are distinctive. They are outside the conventional coffees.

You ought to sell Swift's PREMIUM Hams for your own protection. Can you satisfy your trade unless your hams are uniform? And can they be uniform unless bought from a packer who can keep his raw material uniform?

Few packers have our facilities for keeping hams up to a given standard year after year. Swift's PREMIUM Hams scarcely vary a hair's breadth from one year's end to another. That does us a whole lot of good, as it will do you.

The woman who can always depend on getting good ham—"as good as I bought last time"—is going to buy lots of ham.

Editor "Grocery World."

Dear Sir:—In one of your past issues of the "Grocery World" I saw where the Pittsburg Association adopted the system of collecting of bills operated by the Union Mercantile Agency of Bridgeport, Conn. We are in need of some agency to take care of our delinquent accounts and thought we might get some information about this concern from your company. Any information you give us will be thankfully received and appreciated. Trusting to hear from you at your earliest, we remain,

Yours truly,

The only thing the "Grocery World" knows of the Union Mercantile Agency is that it has a plan of collecting debts, and that certain retail grocers' associations, notably that of Pittsburg, Pa., have adopted it. We have never examined the system and have no evidence whatever as to whether it is equitable or otherwise.

Still on the Map.

Union City, Pa., July 27, 1907.
Editor "Grocery World."

Dear Sir:—Union City is still on the map and alive somewhat to the business interests of her people. Our Business Men's Exchange has accomplished a great deal of good since it was organized, and one of the things that I think of as being the best is the creation of good feeling among the dealers, as we are united in every good thing for the good of all, where it used to be that there was a jealous feeling among us. Some of the good things we have accomplished are early closing, street cleaning, and many other things. We are now considering a public garbage dump and a peddler's license, which will be beneficial to every one living here. Every town not having an organization of this kind should get into line at once and see what good things are in store for them.

Yours truly,
G. E. ANDREWS.

The Sugar Market.

New York, Aug. 2, 1907.
Editor "Grocery World."

Dear Sir:—Business has been quiet this week, following the great activity of last week. A good consumption of sugar, stocks that are not unwieldy, confidence and a firm holding, are responsible for the better values obtained. There have been no new developments, just a steady progress of the conditions and prices have kept pace. The consumption of the country will amount to a certain quantity—it can now be estimated with fair accuracy—and against that consumption the world has supplies that may be drawn upon. On this side of the globe until the end of August we use the product of Cuba, Porto Rico, San Domingo, etc. These crops are finished, our refiners have bought the biggest parts, and what remains is stored up awaiting better prices. Then there are the stocks in warehouse at New York and the sugars held by the refiners at the refinery ports. All added together won't be enough to carry us through until the next crop of Cubas can be laid down here along toward the end of the year. The demand won't stop and the refiners will have to get Javas or European beets to make up the deficiency. That is the basic situation and the owners of the still unsold supplies held in Cuba, Porto Rico, and warehouse New York, will get more money if they await its developments. Its progress so far has been slow, but for some time now it has been attended steadily by additions to ruling values. There will be lanes and by-ways, as there have been, and quotations may not move as fast as owners wish. While they are holding storage charges, interest and deterioration are eating into prospective profits and constantly urging "sell." The refiners just now won't buy Javas or European beets. They won't want them until next autumn. If they bought now the European markets would go up, the advances be reflected here, and prices also rule higher in the United States. The refiners

Here Is a Good Scheme!

Grocers sometimes demonstrate these with fine results. The demonstration shows two things—first, the ease with which beef tea, bouillon or soup is made from these capsules, one of which has simply to be dropped in a cup of hot water; then it shows the delicious, spicy flavor.

want sugars from both markets, but their stocks are good and they can wait. They want the still unsold cane supplies on this side of the globe first and they won't do anything to boom the price for these supplies. Then they will buy the Javas or beets, paying for them only as much as they have to. The situation favors the owners of the supplies our refiners will need, but the owners have some disadvantages against them, can get their price only if they hold firm and carry their stock, and values in any case will move but slowly. The top point is set higher and will be reached, although all of the owners will not get it. But in so far as concerns refined sugar there is very little probability of raw prices having any adverse effect during the balance of this season, and the present situation, with its expected and almost certain development toward a basis that will support higher prices, will make for a well maintained quotation and the placing of the refined price at 5 cents, less 1 per cent. cash when the conditions warrant it.

Refined Sugar.—This branch of the trade is still rather unsettled. The list prices of the American Sugar Refining Co., Howell, and Arbuckle, are on a basis of granulated at 4.90 cents, less 1 per cent. cash, but orders can be placed at 4.80 cents. The Federal continues to quote 4.80 cents on delayed shipment, and 4.70 cents on prompt shipment, both less 1 per cent. cash.

Yours truly,
M. G. Wanzor & Co.

The Spice Market.

Baltimore, Md., July 31, 1907.
Editor "Grocery World."

Dear Sir:—The market continues active, with excellent trading in Nutmegs, Cassia and Pimento. The tendency appears to be upward. Inasmuch as many spices formerly entered into consumption will no longer be admitted by the Custom authorities it will have the effect of a general shortage, which usually means higher prices.

Pepper.—Singapore is holding steady for spot and new arrivals. Fluctuations have been slight during the week. There is a steady demand, and moderate spot stocks keep the prices rather firm.

Cayennes.—Bright stock is in active demand, used largely at this season for pickling purposes.

Cloves are more active and in better demand. Prices, however, are practically unchanged.

Pimento (Allspice) is very active and decidedly higher. Buying has been most liberal. The new crop is reported short and will be late.

Mace is steady, but unchanged. Spot stocks are evidently small.

Nutmegs are active and considerably higher. Cables quote higher figures than spot values. Large sales have been made of 80s and 110s.

Cassia.—Stocks of all grades are small, and at this time there seems hardy enough visible to cover requirements. Higher prices will no doubt rule.

Gingers are very firm. Cochins are somewhat higher. All arrivals are apparently over with the exception of Race, and it is questionable whether this grade of goods will be admitted hereafter.

Seeds.—Poppy continues firm, with upward tendency. Caraway, practically unchanged. Celery, Mustard and Coriander all in good demand.

Green Ginger Root.—Fair arrivals have been noted, goods being quickly sold from dock. Stock is of prime quality.

Yours truly,
McCormick & Co.

Two Reports of the Baltimore Canned Goods Market.

No. 1.

Baltimore, Md., Aug. 1, 1907.
Editor "Grocery World."

Dear Sir:—A few early tomatoes have been packed in Baltimore. These tomatoes have been coming in from the Potomac River, Virginia, and are being packed into No. 2s entirely.

Large arrivals of raw tomatoes will not begin coming in until the middle of August, and it is doubtful if there will be any heavy quantity of tomatoes packed much before September 1st. Raw tomatoes that are now coming into Baltimore do not amount to anything, and are being brought here on account of the high market for them, considering the inferior quality. In spite of the downward tendency of the spot tomato market during the past few weeks, there has been some buying right along. In fact, at the close of the week there seems to be some improvement in the spot market.

Future Tomatoes.—No change to report. There is practically no business being done.

String beans are in very strong shape, with light offerings. Prices show an advance of 2½ cents and 5 cents per dozen on No. 2 and No. 3 and 20 cents per dozen on No. 10. There is an excellent demand for these high-priced beans, and orders are coming from all sections.

A few small lots of Southern peaches have come to Baltimore and have been packed up. The regular crop of Maryland peaches will not be coming in for some little time yet, so that it is hardly fair to say the peach packing season has begun.

There is an excellent demand for cheap peas. Stocks in Baltimore are not large.

Pineapple.—The market is in very much stronger shape on all grades. There has been an unusually good demand this summer, which has left stocks badly cut up.

Small Fruits.—The market is quite active. The packing of all kinds of small fruits is over, with the exception of blackberries, raspberries, and possibly a few gooseberries. The blackberry market closes very much stronger.

Yours truly,
Thos. G. Cranwell & Co.

No. 2.

Baltimore, Md., Aug. 1, 1907.
Editor "Grocery World."

Dear Sir:—In our market letter of three weeks ago, we said the canning of new tomatoes, crop of 1907, would commence in Baltimore about August 1st, contrary to the signed statements of many men in the trade, who ought to know better, that it would be impossible to pack any tomatoes this season before some time in September. The first tomatoes of the season were canned here on Tuesday, July 23d, and unless the unexpected happens one-fifth probably of the output in this market this season will have been made and ready for distribution by September 1st. That statement will not, of course, apply to all sections outside of Baltimore, because in some States the crop is not ready for canning until the latter part of August. From now on our canners will be active in packing tomatoes and a lively demand is anticipated for the new goods, especially for August shipment, when the quality will be at its best. The demand for spot tomatoes for quick shipment continued active all the week, the lower range of prices finding ready buyers to piece out their stocks until deliveries on their contracts for futures are made. At a recent meeting at Wilmington, Del., of the Tri-State Canners' Association the outlook for the tomato crop in Maryland, Delaware and New Jersey was reported to be very encouraging. There was a falling off during the past two weeks in the sales of future tomatoes, but the canners do not show any anxiety to force further sales in view of the fact that nearly all of them are already loaded up with contracts for futures.

There is not an article in the whole list of vegetables packed here, except tomatoes, that shows any weakness, not even peas packed at such unexpected high cost. On the contrary, the list all the way through stands firm to strong, especially string beans, because of the light spring pack. Future corn and sweet potatoes continue fairly active. There is an increasing demand for seconds peas and we will not be surprised if everything offered under 80 cents is closed out shortly.

New peaches were packed here this week for the first time this season, a few days later than usual, and the uncertainty concerning the size of the crop still prevails. There has been such a large demand this season for all kinds of fruits as they came in that the shippers anticipate a heavier demand for fresh peaches because of the light crop, and particularly because the pear crop is also very small. The jobbers everywhere need all grades and sizes of Baltimore peaches immediately, and we expect the same hurry to buy them in small lots for quick shipment as was the case with the first pack of early peas last month.

Yours truly,
Thos. J. Meehan & Co.

AMONG THE TRADE.

The plant of the Millbourne Mills Co., bankrupt, will be leased to the Russell-Miller Milling Co., of Minneapolis, Minn., for $12,000 per year, with an option to purchase plant, good will, brands, etc., for $200,000. A number of creditors opposed the lease, claiming that the plant should be sold at once, but the United States Court decided otherwise.

E. E. Harding, the broker at Front and Walnut streets, who was recently arrested and held in heavy bail charged with making false representations in the sale of the stock of the "Nercumoff Butter Co.," is up against more trouble from the same cause. Dr. William J. Roe, who had him arrested the first time, has now begun a civil suit against him to recover the $3,750 which he claims Harding induced him to invest by fraud. A capias was issued in this case on Monday and bail fixed at $1,000.

Food Law Booms Vanilla Trade.

Consul Julius D. Dreher, of the Society Islands, reports that the price of vanilla beans, which advanced last year, is still advancing, owing chiefly, it is said, to the operation of the pure food law in the United States, which prevents the extensive use formerly made of the adulterated product, vanillin. Good beans are now bringing 50 to 60 cents a pound in Tahiti.

Useful Facts About Groceries

The department which will henceforth be conducted under the above head is best explained by the letter which appears below, and which was recently sent to the "Grocery World." In the hope that a little such matter may be of interest and value to "Grocery World" readers, a short educational article along the lines indicated will appear under this head from time to time.

Vermontville, N. Y.

Editor "Grocery World."

Dear Sir:—I have long wanted a book which would be a sort of encyclopædia, one that would take a certain article, describe it, tell where it grew, how it was prepared for market, what season of the year it was marketed, how it should be stored, whether in a cold or warm place.

Such a book was published once, but as near as I can find out it is out of print now.

I was thinking if the "Grocery World" could devote, say, half a column a week to a work of this kind we would have, in a little while, the long-looked-for work.

But I won't ask for too much, for we are getting good things all the time.

Very truly yours, N. H. Breckenridge.

Formosa Tea.

This is a very superior quality of tea, probably the best in the world. It is grown in Formosa, a new tea district in China, which produces three crops a year, amounting to a total of about half a million half-chests, averaging 43 pounds each. Like other Chinese teas it is cured in small bamboo baskets over charcoal fires, and about 95 per cent. of it goes to America via Amoy and Hong-Kong.

Ginger.

This well-known spice is obtained from the knotty fibrous roots of Zingiber officinale, a reed-like perennial plant, native of China and the East Indies, but now cultivated in several tropical countries, especially in Jamaica. It flourishes best on rich well-drained clayey loam, from small pieces of the root planted about four inches deep and nine to twelve inches apart. In Jamaica it is planted in March or April, after which the whole ground is soon covered with long green leaves nearly like the rose, and red flowers slightly tinged with green appear in September, when the stems of the plant are three to four feet high.

The flowers having withered and seeded the roots are dug up about the latter end of January. If left too long in the ground the tubers put forth stems, and then become fibrous, but if taken up earlier they are only about five or six inches long, very succulent, and suitable for preserving. The yield per acre is about 4,000 pounds. Ginger may be cured as either bleached or unbleached.

The black or dark-colored whole ginger of commerce usually consists of the older tough or horny roots, and is prepared by scalding them in water and then drying in the sun. They are often of inferior strength and flavor.

Whole white ginger is usually of a superior quality, prepared from the best and soundest roots by scraping off the outer dark-colored part and then carefully drying without scalding.

The bleaching of gingers is usually performed after they reach the first markets, and is effected by burning sulphur or chlorinated lime and then covering with sulphate or carbonate of calcium. The chief sorts are Cochin, Jamaica and African. The best ginger is the new, dry, plump, heavy and white colored, and chalky or crumbly inside without worm holes.

These goods are so fine that it is har to sell anything else to consumers onc they have had them; so besides the re ward the Knickerbocker Chocolate C give grocers for pushing them, they a certain to please their trade.

Suppose, for example, a grocer need a new roll-top desk, a safe, a chee cutter, a computing or platform scale instead of drawing on his bank accoun to pay for them he pushes the sale o the Knickerbocker Co.'s goods with h customers, saves the Universal Coupon packed in every case for him and add them to those coming to him from oth manufacturers, and in a short time h will have collected enough to entitle hi to any of the articles named.

The Manufacturers' Trade Mark A sociation issue a handsome illustrate catalogue which they send free to gro cers, showing an almost unlimited arra of useful articles of merchandise whic they will send grocers in exchange fo the Universal Coupons, together with list of all the manufacturers throughou the country who give these same coupon to the grocers.

The Knickerbocker Co. is the on manufacturer of chocolate and coco from whom a grocer can get these Un versal Coupons; so grocers who wa valuable free merchandise as well a their regular profits will concentra their efforts on the sale of the Knicke bocker Chocolate Co.'s goods.

You have been wanting to try the for a long time. No time like the pre ent. Send in your order for Forbe Indexed Coupon Books. See adv.

THE DOUBLE SEAL'S THE THING

The most delicious coffee in the world is fresh coffee. A cheap, poor bean, if fresh, will make a cup of coffee so delicious that even an expert will believe it a high-priced brand.

More really high-grade coffee is spoiled by having gone stale than from any other reason.

All this lies at the bottom of the success of Moco=Mo Coffee, our 25-cent "Coffee in the bag, the bag in the carton." Packed and sealed hot and fragrant from the roasters, it holds every whit of its fresh aroma until the seal is broken.

WE HAVE THE BEST OF REASONS FOR TALKING ABOUT IT

We make a point of exploiting the fact that you will find "The Bottom as Good as the Top" in Apelpi Evaporated Apples, simply because usually the top is very much better than the bottom. We pride ourselves on this particular brand, have built up a big demand for it on its quality alone—you can do the same thing.

Buy Your Cheese and Delicatessen Here

You should buy your cheese, your delicatessen and your fancy groceries from me because I not only have made a specialty of these goods but because I carry full lines of all of them and can in most cases sell you cheaper than you can buy elsewhere.

All my goods are strictly high grade and from the best manufacturers in the world.

Let me quote you prices.

CARL WILDE, 357 N. Second Street, Philadelphia

How to Get 100 Per Cent. Delivery

You never know when you buy future canned goods from your jobber, whether you will get all you bought or any, for that matter. If the jobber gets 100 per cent. delivery, you will get it, but not otherwise.

But you can always count on 100 per cent. if you buy Blue Bell and Clover Farm Tomatoes and Corn. We sell these to the jobber and guarantee him 100 per cent. delivery. He can therefore guarantee it to you, and will, if you buy these brands.

Blue Bell and Clover Farm Tomatoes and Corn are known by the trade generally to be the very best of their grade packed in Maryland.

Ritter's Guaranty

In compliance with the rules and regulations for the enforcement of the Food and Drugs Act published by the Commission appointed for this purpose, we have filed a guaranty covering all our products with the Agricultural Department in Washington under the serial number 1017.

In the future all our products will be labeled in accordance with Regulation Nine as follows: Guaranteed under the Food and Drugs Act, June 30, 1906, No. 1017.

This guaranty is sufficient and covers every sale we make and no individual guaranties are necessary.

It has always been our aim to manufacture pure and wholesome food, to comply with existing laws and to protect all who buy our products, and we shall carry out this principle in the future.

We hope to deserve your continued confidence and patronage.

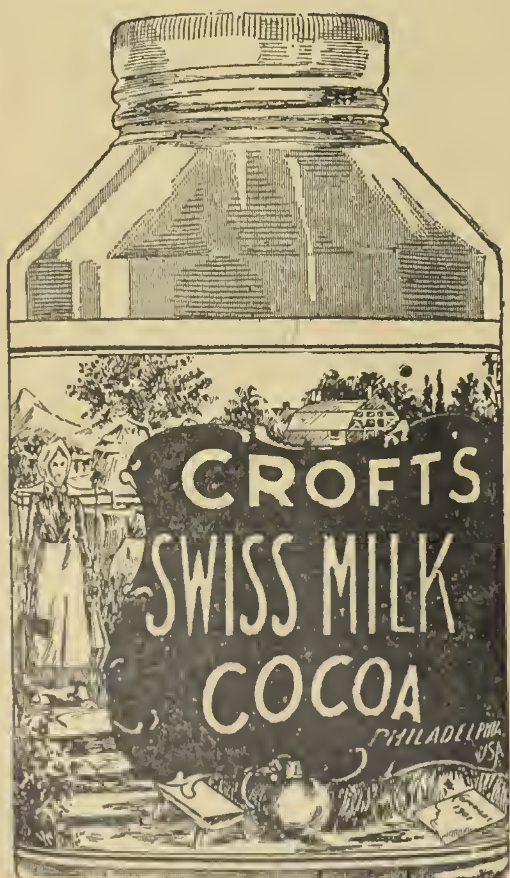
How to Make Other Cocoas as Good as Ours



Take the average cocoa on the market and carry it through another process or two, and you may have an article about as good as Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa.

The trouble is that other manufacturers will not use that "other process or two," because of its cost. They prefer to send out their product half made, as it were—containing indigestible and ill-tasting ingredients which should have been eliminated—so that they can save a little on the cost of making.

Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa has everything taken out that should be taken out, and for that reason, among others, it has the smoothest, finest flavor of any cocoa made.

Will you mention the "Grocery World" when you write?

Robbing Food Laws of Their Terrors

We sell a full line of provisions, but our specialties are

VIENNA SAUSAGES
BOLOGNAS
SMOKED TONGUES

These we sell in very large quantities to the most fastidious trade everywhere.

For two reasons:—

First, they represent the highest possible quality; and

Second, they are absolutely guaranteed to comply with all food laws.

It Is Spelled R-A-M-L-Y

If you want to sell a really delightful smoke, get the real Ramly, don't take something gotten up to look like the Ramly, because there the similarity ends.

No cigarette ever made has jumped into such immediate popularity. It has become famous on its quality alone.

If you put Ramly Cigarettes in stock you will be assured of the permanent patronage of every man to whom you sell a package.

Don't get confused on the name—it is spelled R-A-M-L-Y.

HERE'S HOW WE BRING YOU TRADE

One of the reasons we give why grocers should handle Clicquot Club Ginger Ale is that we are continually working to get them trade for it. Here's a sample postal card we send out to a grocer's customers:

DEAR FRIEND:—I never worry about what kind of refreshments to have these hot summer evenings when we have company drop in on us unawares. I got the idea from Mrs. Watkins. You know we both deal at James Johnson & Sons, 7119-21 Germantown Avenue, and always through the summer we have on hand a case of Clicquot Club soft drinks which they recommend so highly. The case holds two dozen and you can get it assorted, Ginger Ale, Sarsaparilla and Blood Orange. Order some at once and save yourself a lot of future anxiety. Johnson's Phone numbers are C. H. 1041 D. and C. H. 1003 A.
FLOSSIE.

P. S.—They also have all makes of Grape Juice, Imported Ginger Ale, Lemon Soda and Root Beer.

This sort of thing gets business—for you. Beside this kind of advertising we are constantly doing other kinds—in papers and magazines that go all over the country.

So that every case of Clicquot Club Ginger Ale you put in is half sold.

Made from chemically pure and sparkling water and bottled by experts in a spotless plant.

L & S Pickles

L. & S. Pickles are only one of many brands of sweet pickles on the market—why should you push them instead of the others?

A natural question, and here's the answer: L. & S. Pickles are preserved with granulated sugar. Many, many brands—it wouldn't be fair to specify—are sweetened with saccharine, a harmful chemical substance made from coal tar! Besides the harmfulness, saccharine only sweetens on the outside anyway; sugar goes clear to the heart of the pickle and preserves it through and through.

That's why you should choose L. & S. Pickles.

Do you know how cheap Electricity is? Ever think of using it to Grind Coffee? Ask the Manager of the nearest Power House. He will post you on the convenience and economy of Electricity in your business. An will save your clerks' time, your customers' time, and advertise your store. Write for catalogue describing our various Electric Mills, with capacities for granulating from four ounces to nine pounds of coffee per minute.

The illustration shows our double mill No. 08712, with motor for direct current; one mill fitted with grinders for granulating, and the other for pulverizing. Each iron hopper holds six pounds of coffee. There are two speeds, fast and slow, which can be instantly changed from one to the other; at fast speed this mill granulates three pounds of coffee per minute. Fitted with ¾ H. P. motor for direct current, or with ½ H. P. motor for alternating current. The latter for slow speed only. Can be regulated while running for grinding either fine or coarse.

We will gladly give any information desired about these mills.

Grocer's Refrigerator

Every Grocer intends to own a

McCRAY REFRIGERATOR

some time. That time should be NOW. Another year without a McCRAY REFRIGERATOR means you are allowing a useless waste of ice and loss of goods to go on, thus cutting down your profits.

Did you ever consider how many customers you may be losing by selling them butter that they think "Don't taste just right?"

A McCRAY REFRIGERATOR keeps butter and milk sweet and pure. They are perfect refrigerators and will, in a short time, repay their cost through saving of butter and other provisions, and of ice. They are sold entirely on their merits.

McCRAY REFRIGERATORS ARE GUARANTEED

We also build coolers for Meat Markets, Hotels, Restaurants, etc.—in fact for any purpose.

We can here give you but a faint idea of the McCRAY REFRIGERATORS. Let us send you our catalog No. 64, showing our large line of grocers' boxes from which you can make a selection.

WRITE FOR OUR CATALOGS: No. 64 for Grocers, No. 57 for Meat Markets, No. 46 for Hotels, Restaurants, Public Institutions, etc., No. 81 for Residences.

How to Answer Their Questions

Put a box of I-V Washing Tablets on your counter. They will be such a novelty that every woman who comes in will ask what they are and what they will do. Tell them this:—

1—They contain no acid of any sort.
2—They wash clothes without rubbing.
3—They make clothes beautifully white;
4—They can be used in hard water;
5—They take stains from table linen without any rubbing whatever.

Any one of these points would sell a package—just see the women's eyes glisten when you name them all.

DO YOU HAVE { A Delivery Wagon? A Telephone? A Cash Register?

These are secondary considerations nowadays. The essential thing is MODERN FIXTURES—to display and sell goods. You cannot have this without

Walker Bins

A catalog telling all about them will be mailed on request.

WALKER PATENT PIVOTED BIN CO.
24 South Seventh Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

"As Good as the 'J. M.'"

No delivery wagon built is as good as the "J. M.," though many are said to be. The makers of other wagons do the best they can, but they haven't our facilities.

The "J. M." wagon is the handsomest, longest-lived delivery wagon on the market. No other wagon manufacturer we ever knew rejected everything but second-growth hickory for wheels, as we do.

Only Seventeen Grocery Stores Out of Four Hundred and Eighty-one Conducted in Excellent Condition

So Says the Indiana Board of Health After Examination. One Hundred and Seventy Were Good and the Balance from Fair to Bad. Extracts from Pure Food Report for Indiana. A Stab at Dirty Stores. Summary of State Chemist's Work.

A statement just issued by the Indiana State Board of Health, which enforces the food laws of the State of Indiana, is an interesting commentary upon the retail grocery business, as it is conducted within the State named, particularly that part of the report which reports the physical condition of the stores visited.

The "Grocery World" has taken a few extracts from the Indiana report and here presents them:—

> The results of the analyses of food samples indicates a greatly changed condition of affairs in the last few months. Not only has the percentage of adulteration dropped perceptibly, but it is becoming more and more difficult to find samples that may even be suspected of being impure. This condition is largely attributable to the passage of the Federal Food Law, which has compelled manufacturers to eliminate impure goods from all shipments intended for interstate trade.

> In many instances business methods have undergone marked changes; manufacturers have had to discard formulæ that have been in use for years, and to install new machinery and apparatus. This is especially true in the case of abattoirs and the smaller slaughter-houses, many of which have been conducted in a careless and unsanitary manner.
> Following instructions to inspectors in regard to sanitary conditions, 56 cities and towns have already been visited and 1,387 business places have been examined. Out of 481 grocery stores, 17 were found to be in an excellent condition; 170 were good, 229 fair, 52 poor and 13 bad. The places reported as being in poor or bad condition were usually unclean or poorly lighted and ventilated. Of the 302 meat markets inspected, 6 were in excellent condition, 90 good, 165 fair, 23 poor and 18 bad. The meat shops were usually condemned as being poor or bad because of unclean conditions and foul refrigerators. The drug stores, 220 of which were inspected, are on the whole kept in a much better condition than are the grocery stores and meat markets. Eleven were in excellent shape, 122 good, 78 fair, 9 poor, while none were so managed that they were reported as bad. One hundred and thirty bakeries and candy shops were inspected and 4 found to be in excellent condition, 50 good, 51 fair, 19 poor and 6 bad. The bake shops were usually condemned because of unclean conditions; a few were poorly lighted and badly ventilated. Of the 189 hotels and restaurants examined, 9 were in excellent condition, 67 good, 67 fair, 39 poor and 7 bad.
> In all of our larger cities, especially in those sections where the foreign population lives, much of the food supply as well as the fruit and candies are sold from stalls and push-carts in the streets. These stocks of goods are rarely protected from dust and filth and every wind that blows deposits its quota of germ-laden dirt on some article designed as food. Food products can not be clean if they are made in dirty shops, displayed in dirty stores, sold by dirty men. They may comply with recognized standards of purity, that is, they may be properly labeled, of full weight, and made from the genuine article, but although they are passed as "inspected," they are not wholesome and should not be sold. The grocery store or market is the distributing agent of the food manufacturer. It is probable that 95 per cent. of our food passes through the hands of the grocer or meat man. The prosperous merchant is usually awake to the fact that his business will suffer if his shop is not attractive, and his stock fresh. But in every community there are some dealers whose meat blocks are unclean and covered with flies, whose refrigerators are slimy and foul smelling, whose back rooms are filled with accumulated filth, whose cellars are damp and dirty, whose dried fruit is wormy, whose fruit and vegetables are decayed, and whose cat sleeps in the cracker barrel.

The report contains several adverse reports on well-known food products by Indiana State chemists. Among these are the following:—

> Tip Top Corn, packed by the Grafton-Johnson Co. "Adulterated with saccharine."
> Strawberry Fruit Flavor, packed by the Zipp Manufacturing Co., Cleveland, Ohio. "Contains benzoic acid. Adulterated; not an extract."
> Chili Sauce, packed by the Tip Top Ketchup Co., Cincinnati. "Adulterated; starch present."
> Tomato Catsup, packed by Alameda Packing Co. "Coal-tar dye. Adulterated, starch and salicylic acid."
> Tomato Ketchup, packed by Van Camp Packing Co., Indianapolis, Ind. "Adulterated, salicylic acid."

The following interesting summary of reports also appears, showing the exact proportion of adulteration in all the food products examined:—

Big Increase in Fruit and Nut Production.

Fruits and nuts of domestic production are supplying a rapidly increasing share of American consumption of those classes of commodities, and in certain articles, notably raisins, prunes and oranges, the home product has practically excluded that of foreign origin. A compilation recently made by the Bureau of Statistics of the Department of Commerce and Labor strikingly illustrates the improved position of the United States during the past twenty years with reference to its ability to supply home demand for fruits and nuts. Twenty years ago the importations of fruits and nuts amounted in value to 20⅔ million dollars, while domestic exportations thereof were but 2⅔ millions, purchases of the foreign product being thus over seven times as much as sales to foreign countries. In the fiscal year just ended importations were about 35 millions and exportations 17¼ millions, American sales abroad of home-produced fruits and nuts being thus practically one-half as much as purchases of the foreign product. In the period from 1887 to 1907 imports of fruits and nuts have increased but 80 per cent., while exports of the domestic product have increased about 540 per cent.

Dried Fruit Conditions Greatly Upset

Wholesale Grocers Who Have Future Contracts Want Packers to Deliver Goods Covered Thereby and Guarantee Them: Packers Forbidden by Federal Government to Guarantee Fruits Containing as Much Sulphur as Practically All This Year's Pack Does. Jobbers Demand Both Goods and Guarantee, but Cannot Have Both.

The question what is to be done with California dried fruits of the present pack which have been bleached with a larger amount of sulphur than the Federal officials permit to be used is arousing the trade to considerable discussion. The important phase of the question is the effect of present conditions upon future delivery contracts which comprehend heavy sales of new dried fruits, none of which have been shipped as yet. It is believed that every pound of dried fruits covered by these contracts contains more than 35-1,000 of 1 per cent., which is the most sulphur that the Government says can be used. This is particularly the case with evaporated peaches and Ruby prunes. The jobbing trade are uncertain as to what to do under their contracts. The packers will deliver the goods, but they are forbidden by the Government to give a guarantee of conformity with the law, and the jobbers are afraid to handle the goods without the guarantee. In other words, the jobber wants the goods, and he wants the guarantee, but under the Federal ruling he cannot have both. Some jobbers are disposed to insist that the packer keep to his contract and deliver goods which will not only be in every particular the goods contracted for, but which will be also legal. How both conditions can be united in the same goods can hardly be seen. It looks to the "Grocery World" as if both the wholesale and retail grocer would be compelled to sell dried fruits without a guarantee this year. This will probably mean no risk, however, since the Federal food authorities have given interested parties to understand that no prosecutions will be brought this year against dried fruits, no matter how much sulphur they contain, provided the amount is not grossly excessive.

To those not posted on the reason for using sulphur in dried fruits, it may be illuminating to explain that in drying fruits whose pulp is of light color—apricots, pears, apples and peaches—it is the universal custom to expose them for a short time to the fumes of burning sulphur in order to prevent decay and discoloration. All such fruits when exposed to the air rapidly oxodize and turn dark. The sulphur fumes stop that process and preserve the natural color. It is, of course, possible to continue this process until the fruit becomes so impregnated with sulphur as to be unfit for human consumption. It may be safely said that this is never purposely done. Sulphur costs money and fruit growers do not waste it to no purpose. It is always an object to push the work and get the fruit out of the bleaching house as fast as possible.

In defense of their action the packers contend that the consuming public demands that these dried fruits shall be of light color, and will not buy or eat them in important quantities if they are not light-colored. This industry, the world over, is based on the practice of the moderate bleaching of dried apples, pears, peaches, apricots and some varieties of dried grapes.

Never Said Grocers Were Thieves

New York State Superintendent of Weights and Measures Writes the "Grocery World" That He Never Said as Quoted in Philadelphia "North American," That New York State Grocers Were Robbing the Public of $20,000,000 a Year. Exonerates the Grocer from Many Short-weight Frauds.

The Philadelphia "North American" one day last week published a brief dispatch from Albany, N. Y., quoting the State Superintendent of Weights and Measures as having stated that the retail grocers of New York State were robbing the public of $20,000,000 every year through short weights and measures.

This statement was so astounding that in spite of the fact that it appeared in the "North American" and was therefore of doubtful authenticity, the "Grocery World" wrote the New York State Superintendent for verification. His answer confirms the "Grocery World's" opinion and proves to be another misrepresentation on the part of the "North American." The letter follows:—

Albany, N. Y., August 3, 1907.

Mr. E. J. Buckley,
Editor of the "Grocery World,"
Philadelphia, Pa.

Dear Sir:—Yours of the 1st inst. has been received. The quotation to which you allude is not correct. What I did say and firmly believe, based upon investigations which I have made for the last three or four years, that by short weighting and measuring of the commodities in this State, whether they be groceries, meats, dairy products, dry goods, canned goods, carton goods, the people are losing at least twenty million dollars ($20,000,000) annually on a basis that they should receive what they are told or what they assume they receive. In short, a great many weights and measures are fraudulent not on account of the dishonesty of the merchant, but on account of the ignorance on his part, or the lack of inspection which the government, municipal or State, should exercise. Every honest merchant thoroughly approves of a rigorous inspection of his weighing or measuring devices because he desires to give his customers what they pay for and what they are supposed to get.

If at any time I can be of any assistance to the "Grocery World," or to any grocers', butchers' or any merchants' association, I will do everything in my power to lend my aid. If I have not made myself clear at any time, I shall be pleased to answer any inquiries.

Yours very truly,
F. Reichmann.

Philadelphia Firm Gets Millbourne Mills.

Shane Bros. Co., of "King Midas" Flour, Will Operate the Plant After Improvements.

The plant of Millbourne Mills Co., Sixty-third and Market streets, Philadelphia, has been secured by Shane Brothers' Co., Philadelphia, who have for several years been identified with the sale of "King Midas" flour, which they advertise as "the highest priced flour in America."

It is proposed to install additional machinery of the latest type. The two Millbourne brands, "Millbourne" and "Ontop," will be continued, and the entire local organization of salesmen will continue their sale in this market under the direction of R. S. Dewees. The improvements contemplated can be made without interrupting the operation of the plant, and Shane Brothers' Co. announce that "Millbourne" and "Ontop" will be ready for delivery within a week.

The negotiations for the property were conducted by representatives of a Minneapolis mill on behalf of Shane Brothers' Co., and the mills, which have been a landmark in West Philadelphia, will from now on be operated by local capital. The terms of the lease call for the immediate expenditure of $15,000 for improvements.

Tomato Pack Promises Heavy.

Opinion General That If Weather Holds, All Sections Will Pack Largely. Canners Already Buying in Wholesale Green Markets.

All authorities on the tomato situation seem to agree that if the present favorable weather holds there is going to be a heavy crop and a heavy pack in all sections. The canners are already buying fruit in the wholesale markets, at a price around 25 cents per basket, which indicates a large available supply.

New tomatoes are now being

Naturally the pack is in the hands of the weather, but it is practically certain that if the weather holds the supply during the season of 1907-08 will be heavy.

Heart-to-Heart Talks With Grocery Clerks

"Mutual Aid Sheets" Which a Large Eastern Retail Grocer Tucks in Each Clerk's Weekly Pay Envelope. Some Advice From the Head of the House on Selling Goods and Other Subjects.

[The "Grocery World" has come into possession of a series of "Mutual Aid Sheets," which are weekly little talks issued regularly to its clerks by one of the large retail grocery stores of the East. The talks are typewritten and a copy is enclosed in each clerk's pay envelope. They are so soundly practical and so useful generally that it is this journal's purpose to publish them weekly or bi-weekly for the edification of other clerks as well as other grocers who have clerks.—Ed.]

IV.

LITTLE THINGS.

Never walk over a paper bag. The man that can do that shows lack of training as well as a lazy indifference to the simplest kind of economy.

Let no one in our employ be guilty of such a misdemeanor.

Be careful you don't use a 5-pound bag for 3 pounds of sugar or a 14-pound bag for 4 quarts of beans. It's an awful reflection on the management and goes a long way toward putting a value upon your efficiency as a clerk to be habitually guilty of such wastefulness.

Don't roll an 8 x 10 bundle in three yards of paper. It's an insult to the customer. Study neatness. It's an asset.

When you wrap up a bottle of catsup or a bottle of anything don't squeeze the paper tightly around the neck. It isn't polite. When you hand a check to the customer for payment point to the cashier's desk and say "thank you."

Avoid the use of the words "anything else to-day"? Instead, "what next, Madam."

If it's a good size bundle hitch a handle to it. Don't sprawl over the counter when you're taking an order. It's lazy looking and is in poor taste.

Never show a bottle or package to the customer that is dusty or fly-specked. See that every yeast cake you sell is put in a yeast cake envelope.

A piece of meat must not be placed on the scale without first laying it on paper. Drop your cheese into a bag after wrapping unless it is to be delivered. Don't throw round flat biscuits into a bag. Pack them in. Don't "let on" if you're not feeling well. Keep your hands clean. Look out for a tobacco breath. If she's a crank feel proud that you're the one that sells her goods. Keep a memorandum of names and addresses. Many a customer will get a surprise at your memory and your interest in them. Fix faces in your mind. Especially those of good buyers.

"Hope the last order you gave me, Mrs. ——— was satisfactory." That's a good remark.

Wipe the counter often.

The Dog May Bite

Honestly, you will be much more likely to succeed by pushing Hotel Astor Coffee than by pushing a blend of your own.

We have been in coffee blending for many years. Obviously, we must know more about it than you do. And then Hotel Astor Coffee has been tried on the dog—the hardest dog to please in the United States—the patrons of the most exclusive hotels of New York City. The dog pronounced it good at once, and with the stamp of weighty approval upon it we offer it to you.

When you blend your own coffee the dog you try it on is your own customers—that's risky; the dog may bite.

A perfect blend of superfine coffee. For the very finest trade.

Whose Is the Business?

In another column is briefly reported a lawsuit brought in Wheeling, W. Va., by the W. F. Davidson Co., wholesale grocers of Steubenville, Ohio, to restrain one J. H. Mosel, a salesman, from entering the employ of McGowan Bros., another firm of jobbers. The ground for the action has few if any precedents in the grocery line. Mosel was formerly the Davidson Co's salesman and while in their employ built up for them a large and profitable business. Later he went to McGowan Brothers, and took with him the large and profitable business which the Davidson Co. had thought was their own. Thereupon the latter brought suit against Mosel for injunction and got it.

This is a question upon which endless surges of argument have spent themselves, with little or no definite result—the subject is still open. To whom belongs the business secured by a salesman—to his employer or to himself? Does there pass with his employment the right to the permanent as well as the transient results of his labors, or is the principal the salesman's and only the interest the employer's?

The writer has always believed this question to be largely governed by whether the salesman was salaried or commissioned. If paid by commission—simply such and such a share of what he sold—then he is a free lance and can lay a pretty reasonable claim to the business he himself has built up. But if he is paid by salary, he is not in equity a free lance in any degree. All he has and all he does, if acquired and performed during the term of his employment, is his employer's absolutely.

The Oil Trust's Sharp Stress.

Truly, these are stormy days for the Standard Oil Co., though it remains to be seen whether the present series of terrific blows will touch the Trust in the only spot where it is sensitive—its dividends.

The public is generally familiar with the enormous fine of over $29,000,000 imposed by the Federal Court at Chicago for the taking of illegal freight rebates. Almost simultaneous with this comes the second installment of the report of the United States Department of Commerce and Labor, covering the results of the Trust's domination of the oil market for twenty-five years. This report is lengthy and cannot be reproduced, though well worth the careful reading of every grocer. Two paragraphs, however, are particularly noteworthy and are here presented. They appear in the report to support the charge that the Oil Trust's profits have been continuously exorbitant and excessive:—

> Almost equally effective in maintaining the Standard's position have been its unfair methods of competition in the selling of products. The Standard maintains bogus independent companies, and thereby is able to escape the disadvantage due to anti-Trust sentiment, as well as to cut prices to the particular customer of competitors without incurring the further loss of cutting prices to the entire trade in the locality.
> Again, the Standard maintains an elaborate system of espionage on the business of independent concerns, in particular securing almost complete reports of their receipts and shipments of oil by bribing railroad employees. This practice enables the Standard to direct its policy of local price-cutting in the most effective manner. Other less important methods of unfair competition pursued by the Standard are the giving of short measure and deception regarding the quality of the oil sold.
> Without railroad discriminations and unfair methods of competition the Standard could never have maintained its great proportion of the oil business in the United States while at the same time extorting such immense profits from the American consumer.

Immediately after the issuance of this report, the Oil Trust made another surprising exhibition of ignorance concerning the real attitude of the public toward it. John D. Archbold, vice-president, gave out a counter statement, in which he complained bitterly because the Government officials did not come to him for their data. "It is sufficient now for us to say," says Mr. Archbold, "that in the preparation of his report Mr. Smith did not see fit even to confer with us. We think the public will agree that we were at least entitled to be heard in such a matter. If Mr. Smith had seen fit to confer with us we would readily have furnished him the data for a truthful statement of facts on this question."

Can any Trust official really be ignorant of the fact that no independent soul in all the land places the slightest credence in anything an Oil Trust official would say, even under oath, and that "the truthful statement of facts" which the Trust stood willing to furnish would be merely a tissue of plausible lies?

Tobacco Trust, Liar.

As an example of the absolute unscrupulousness of the commercial Trust in small things, read the following advertisement, which has appeared in most Eastern papers during the last few days:—

> IMPORTANT NOTICE TO TOBACCO DEALERS AND THEIR SALESMEN.
> Ramleh Turkish Cigarettes, which in the short time since their introduction have won such tremendous popularity, will hereafter be known as the "Helmar." We ask your assistance in announcing this change of name to your customers—feeling sure you will recognize the advantage of continuing your recommendation of this splendid cigarette.
> The "Ramleh" becomes the "Helmar" in order to prevent misrepresentation by manufacturers of cigarettes with names spelled or sounding similar to "Ramleh." There is no change whatever in the original, distinctive quality which has attracted so many thousands of smokers to the "Ramleh." The general style of the package is also the same—the only change being in the name, which will hereafter be "Helmar."

This advertisement was signed by "S. Anargyros," which is simply a nom de plume of the Tobacco Trust. The actual facts of the change from "Ramleh" to "Helmar" are that a New England concern making a "Ramly" cigarette prosecuted the Trust for infringing upon "Ramly" with "Ramleh," and won its case. In abandoning the illegitimate name the Trust is simply making a virtue of necessity. But it wouldn't be the Tobacco Trust if it didn't leave the ring with a lie on its lips.

Wholesale Grocery Salesman Enjoined.

James H. Mosel, a bookkeeper formerly employed by W. F. Davidson Co., of Steubenville, Ohio, and more recently by McGowan Brothers, is prevented from working for the latter company by an injunction just secured by the former at Wheeling, W. Va., who alleged that Mosel is a man of skill and proficiency in the grocery business, and is now covering the selling route for the McGowan Co. that he formerly covered for the Davidson's, thus diverting their business to the McGowan's.

Scarcity of Large Peas a Complication.

All Packing Sections Run to Small Sizes This Year. Large Sizes Scarce Hard to Get and High. Difficulties of Substitution.

The fact that in all pea packing sections this year's crop and pack have run to small sizes, making large sizes very scarce, is beginning to complicate the canned pea situation. To begin with, it has made the large sizes, such as standard early Junes, very hard to get and high in price. Practically none can be bought under $1.05 in a large way. The normal price would be 85 to 90 cents.

By reason of the fact that all packing sections report the same peculiarity about the current pack, practically no buyer of large sizes will get 100 per cent. There will be plenty of smaller sizes and the packer is only too ready to deliver these in lieu of the large, but the price is against them, and there is another reason against them. The jobber who delivers small peas for large is establishing an expensive precedent for himself, for his buyers will be dissatisfied forever after with anything but the better grade which he will naturally wish to purchase at the price of the poorer, as he did this year. Nevertheless, this will probably have to be the outcome, as there are not enough large sizes to go around.

What Food Manufacturers Must Tell Federal Food Inspectors

The Department of Agriculture gradually getting things in hape for the enforcement of the ederal food law and is now bout ready for a general campaign. There have been some inpections made, but not many up date, and no cases whatever ave been brought. Between irty and forty inspectors are at ork in different sections of the untry, most of whom have spent eir time investigating the contion of food manufactories. The partment has perfected a series forms containing questions hich are to be asked each manucturer visited. These questions ver a large amount of ground d touch all phases of the busiss which can possibly have any nnection with purity or wholeneness.

Whenever samples of any prodt subject to the food law are ken, the inspector reports to the partment on the following ank:—

n the case of factories where d or drugs are made, the proetor is put through the follow- course of questioning:—

Name of manufacturer. Location f factory. Class of products manuctured. Sanitary surroundings of ctory. Number of employees. ealth of employees (tuberculosis, c.). Cleanliness and dress of emoyees. Provisions for health and mfort of employees. Cleanliness d sanitary condition of factory. ocation and condition of toilet oms. Kind and condition of ors. Condition of walls and ceilg. Light and ventilation. Condion of storage rooms. Kinds of raw materials. Source of raw materials. Condition of raw materials. Preservatives used, if any, and in what. Artificial colors used, if any, and in what. Are any other materials used that require declaration? If so, what? Are any materials used in violation of the law? If so, what? Kinds of products manufactured? Amount of output. Purity of products. Sanitary condition of products. Are products labeled in conformity to law? General remarks and criticisms.

The scope of questions asked of milk or dairy producers is somewhat different. Here are the questions in that line:—

Name of manufacturer. Location of factory. Address of factory. Apparent quality of the milk and cream used, as to cleanliness and as to freshness. What proportion of the milk or cream used is known to be from cows certified by a veterinarian as free from tuberculosis? Is the milk or cream pasteurized? If so, at what temperature and for how long a time? Name of the pasteurizing apparatus used. What is the general grade of packing stock (butter) for renovating or ladling? Is it new, or fresh, or stored? Source and condition of the water used in washing and materials or the product, and the utensils, separators, vats, churns, etc. Are all utensils properly rinsed, scalded and aired? Describe method for cleansing receptacles. If steam is used, state in what manner and for how long. Source of air for blowing the butter oil. Name of the finished product or products (i. e., cream, butter, ice cream, renovated butter, casein, etc.), stating apparent quality of each.

There is already considerable grumbling over the searching character of these questions, and many manufacturers threaten that they will refuse to answer them, on the ground that they are not warranted by the law.

volume of business he is doing, may be a good buyer, confining his stock to good selling lines bought at right prices, may be able to establish and maintain a proper ratio between his gross sales and his expenses, may get prices that should leave a fair margin of profit after allowing for expenses and a reasonable percentage for bad accounts, and yet if he does not adopt and follow a definite and correct system in handling his book accounts, he is bound to fall short of success and is almost certain to eventually wind up in failure. To this end he should begin by getting the name and address of every applicant for credit, whether married or single, where employed, in what capacity and at what wages, names of persons or firms with whom he has traded on credit, or good references in case he has never run an account, as might be the case with a young man leaving the parental roof, getting married and starting out for himself; how often he is paid for his services, weekly or monthly; the amount or limit of credit to be extended, and a promise to pay his account in full every time he gets his wages. A record should be made of the applicant's answers to all of these questions, the references should be followed up and their statements or answers added to the same record; also full particulars as to any other bills owing. If the record appears satisfactory throughout he should open the account and then keep a check on it to see that it is kept within the agreed limit as to amount and time of payments. With all of these precautions losses are bound to occur.

Your Profit, and That's All.

Every grocer sells chocolate and cocoa—his customers must have it. No matter whose he sells, he makes his profit and no more. He has no good reason for recommending one brand instead of another, so he hands out what his customers ask for.

The Knickerbocker Chocolate Co., of New York, are giving grocers a real reason for trying to push the sale of Barker's Hasty Lunch Chocolate, Blue Ribbon and Bedford Cocoas. For making a point to give these particular goods to their trade when no special brand is asked for and for recommending them when some other brand is asked for.

They are the only chocolate manufacturers who are using their advertising appropriation to buy valuable merchandise to give to grocers to reward them for their efforts.

The quality of Barker's Hasty Lunch Chocolate, Bedford and Blue Ribbon Cocoas cannot be excelled; they are certain to please everybody who is induced to buy them, and, still more important, every case of these goods carries Universal Coupons for the grocer. These coupons are exchangeable for almost any article of merchandise a grocer may want. They are the same as cash.

When it is possible for a grocer to sell not only as fine chocolate and cocoa as there is on the market and not only make his profit and please his trade, but get a roll-top desk, a new set of harness, standard scales, or even a new delivery wagon or a piano, isn't he short-sighted if he doesn't do his best to push the sale of these particular goods?

Why be satisfied with the profit alone if you can get a premium besides?

Here Is Something of Interest.

A cough cure that is guaranteed, an advertising proposition and a profit of $22.50 on a gross—that is what the Dilliard Remedy Co., of East Bangor, Pa., have to say with reference to their German Fir Cough Cure. Better write them for full particulars.

The New York Letter

Echoes of the New York State Convention. Spice Men Organize. Plans of the New Cracker Combine. New York Firms Get Panama Grocery Contracts.

Special correspondence of "Grocery World."

New York, Aug. 9, 1907.

As the annual convention of the New York State Association has been in session in Elmira this week, interest of the retail trade has centred there. Several of the New York men who were present and who could not remain for the entire week have returned and say that the convention has been most successful.

A feature of Wednesday's session was the unanimous adoption of a resolution denouncing statements made by Fritz Reichmann, the State Superintendent of Weights and Measures, which were reported in your correspondent's letter of last week. The Superintendent said that the grocers of the State use inaccurate weights, purposely or otherwise, and thus defraud the people out of $20,000,000 annually. The resolution pointed out that this startling announcement was made by Mr. Reichmann after inspecting the weights and measures in only one city.

Another resolution was in relation to the system—it has grown into a system—of horse stealing that flourishes in this city, where hundreds of delivery horses belonging to the grocers are stolen each year, and the efforts of the police to apprehend the thieves are ineffective. The resolution asks that a law be passed making the maximum penalty ten years and the minimum penalty five years for this offense.

That New York State is not organized as strongly as other States, in proportion to the number of grocers, was the subject of some unfavorable comment by members in talking over plans for building up the association.

James Hayhoe, of Syracuse, said that New York State, with its 8,000,000 inhabitants, is the most poorly organized State of all in which the grocers have tried to make any headway. There has been no properly directed, concerted effort to increase the organization to its proper size. He said that in Ohio there are 300 organizations, but in the State of New York there are only 20.

"Sixty Years in the Grocery Business" proved to be one of the most interesting addresses of a general character, L. J. Callanan, of this city, being the speaker. He spoke of the early training in his father's grocery store in Ireland, which he entered at an early age in preference to studying Latin and Greek. Leaving his father later, he came here, worked in a store in New Orleans for a short time, then for several years in a Brooklyn grocery, and next went to the Vesey street store, where he built up the big business which he now conducts.

The advice he emphasized was that grocers should be their own judges of the quality of the food products which they sell, instead of relying on what salesmen or agents tell them. The lack of uniformity that existed in the products of the Vesey street store, when he first took charge of it, he said, is duplicated in many other stores, and drives customers to the tea and coffee houses.

He began selecting his own tea and coffee at he beginning, and he is to-day recognized as one of the leading experts of the country in these lines, while his trade in both lines has grown to proportions that would have amazed his predecessors in the same location.

Another point he brought out was his fondness for changing the window displays and rearranging the stock. This led to an amusing incident when he was a young clerk in the O'Donnel store in Brooklyn. The proprietor had steadily refused to allow his clerk to make any changes in the arrangement of the stock, but Mrs. O'Donnel thought the clerk's ideas were right. A funeral which took the head of the store away for a few hours gave the clerk his chance. When Mr. O'Donnel returned he walked to the back of the store, like a man in a daze, and asked a crony, "Is this my store." But young Callanan's services were appreciated, as the old man subsequently showed.

Spice importers, manufacturers and jobbers yesterday formed an organization which is to improve conditions in the trade by united and intelligent action, but is not to make any effort to influence selling prices, according to the statements of members. Mr. Thayer, of Austin, Nichols & Co. told your correspondent that it is intended to place the trade as nearly as possible on a basis similar to that of the grain trade, as organized in the Produce Exchange. There an arbitration committee adjusts differences as they arise, and this is one of the chief purposes in view, he said, in the spice trade. As to prices, he said, they were not even mentioned at the meeting, and nobody has an idea of trying to advance them.

The arbitration committee is to pass on disagreemnts as to quality, contracting terms, delivery etc. Committees on standards and contracts were appointed.

J. C. Clark, who was chosen secretary, said that the association is to uphold the pure food law in every way and is "not in any way to oppose, evade or attempt to discredit it."

The American Spice Trade Association is the name of the association. Those represented at the meeting from New York included: Austin, Nichols & Co., Francis H. Leggett & Co., J. J. Recknagel & Son, L. Littlejohn & Co., Frame & Co., John Kissock & Co., J. W. Rulon & Sons, Winter & Simillie, Archibald & Lewis, C. E. Armstrong, Wm. Tappenbeck, T. Philadelphia was represented by A. Colburn & Co., Wecker Smith Spice Co., L. H. Parker

Co., Clauson Co., G. P. Morgan & Co.

Other cities represented were: Boston, Stickney & Poor Spice Co.; Baltimore, Parrish Bros., McCormick & Co.; Cincinnati, Frank Gess Spice Co., W. H. Harrison & Co., Newton Tea and Spice Co., Hecken Spice Co.; St. Louis, C. H. Flach Brokerage Co.; Rochester, R. T. French Co.; Toledo, Woolson Spice Co.

The association selected J. H. Recknagel for president.

H. B. Grubbs, manager of the iscuit and Crackers Manufacrers' Co., has given out some inormation as to the proposed ombine of independent manufacrers. He says that the new ompany is in a way an outrowth of his association which as formed as a buying concern purchase supplies for the indeendent factories. The members, said, have learned the advanges of association and propose carry the principle a step rther. He expects that there ill be represented in the new ompany about 100 bakeries who ive a combined output of $25,-00,000 a year. Each concern is maintain its individuality in anagement, but economies are be effected in various ways and ompetition along parallel lines is be reduced, it is stated. The rchasing company is to conue. It was originally a St. ouis company, and several years o, when its scope was enlarged, r. Grubbs came here as its manger.

A number of New York concerns have received this week contracts to furnish canned food to the Panama Railroad Co., deliveries to be made here or in New Orleans within six months. Among those to whom were awarded these contracts are Austin, Nichols & Co., the Acker, Merrall & Condit Co., R. C. Williams & Co., Jas. E. Morris & Co. A large variety of canned fruit and vegetables are to be furnished by these companies. Contracts were also made for large quantities of cereals. Contracts for meat in various forms were given to Armour & Co., the Cudahy Packing Co., Libby, McNeill & Libby, Morris & Co. and others. The Goshen Manufacturing Co. is to furnish 65 cases of oleomargarine.

The Health Board authorities are looking into the alleged sales in this city of considerable quantities of eggs that have been in incubators for a few days, and, having failed of their purpose there, are deemed good enough for the use of a large manufacturing concern in this city. It may be that further particulars will be given out later by the authorities.

We Are Going to Show How You Can Increase Your Trade at an Expense You Can Afford

Why is Willow Grove Park lighted by countless thousands of electric bulbs?

Why are Coney Island's Parks illuminated in the same way?

Why do all amusement places, department stores, and other big business enterprises spend such enormous sums for light? There is only one answer—to attract the people. Their success depends entirely on attracting the people. Doesn't yours? Why can't you take a leaf out of their book? If light brings them trade, won't it bring trade to you?

Did you ever stop to consider that you could illuminate your window in such a way that it would be sure to "attract the people"—and that if you get one new customer a day through it, the expense will be paid for a month. We will show you how it can be done if you will write or phone us.

Ham Confidence

There is a vast difference between merely "ham" and Swift's PREMIUM ham.

The grocer who just keeps "ham," who buys no special brand, and buys from no particular packer, is just as certain to have a small and irregular ham trade as night is certain to follow day.

But the grocer who sells only Swift's PREMIUM ham, which is always the same and always fine, will have a ham trade that amounts to something. His trade won't care to experiment with other grocers; they're getting what they want and they're getting it all the time.

PREMIUM hams are tender, delicious and—this is important—well advertised.

Window-Dressing Articles Wanted

For several months the "Grocery World" has been looking fo the right man to take charge of its "Window-Dressing Department and contribute a good, suggestive weekly article. We have trie several, but none was exactly what was wanted.

We will now attempt to get these articles from our subscriber probably every one of whom has some technical knowledge of wir dow-dressing. What we want is articles clearly describing windo displays that can be made by the average retailer; not necessarily ne or original—in fact, those which have been used successfully ar perhaps preferable to all others.

For all acceptable articles, the "Grocery World" will pay a average price of $5 each. All matter sent in under this arrangemer should be addressed to the "Window-Dressing Department." drawings are also sent they should be made throughout in black in (not pencil).

THE GROCERY MARKETS

Tea.

The tea market shows no particular change for the week although the situation seems somewhat firmer. Spot new Japans are firm and show an advance of fully 4 cents per pound from a few months ago. This price will probably recede as the later crops come in. India-Ceylons are also firm, particularly on the other side. In fact, almost the entire line is steady to firm and in good healthy condition. The demand for teas is fair.

Coffee.

The market for Rio and Santos coffee has ruled weak during the past week and options have declined 30 to 35 points from the recent advance. Actual Brazil coffee has declined about ⅛ cent in sympathy. The chief factor in the decline has been the continued refusal of the distributing trade to come into the market with anything but their actual wants. If buyers continue to show the same attitude during the balance of the crop year the syndicate's plans to hold up the market will be set absolutely at naught. The syndicate's present scheme is to stir up the trade with all sorts of reports regarding bad weather in Brazil, thus reducing in prospect the coming crop. Most of these reports up to date, however, have been false, and have had but little weight. Mild coffees are steady and unchanged; demand light. Java is firm and advancing. The stock of Java coffee on August 1st in warehouse in New York was 34,503 mats, as against 122,600 mats on August 1, 1906. In other words, about 70 per cent. less Java coffee is in stock in Ne York than there was one yea ago. The amount of Java coff afloat for the United States very small, and these conditio mean only one thing—a co stantly advancing price for th character of coffee. Mocha co fees are steady and unchanged.

Sugar.

The sugar market is quiet ar shows no change for the wee Raws are steady on the ruli basis. Refined sugar is stea and in improving demand. T refiners declare that up to date t consumption of sugar has be disappointing.

Syrup and Molasses.

Glucose is unchanged for t week. Compound syrup is light demand at unchanged pric Sugar syrup is in some dema for export, but very little for d mestic trade. Prices are u changed. Molasses is quiet a unchanged.

Canned Goods.

Spot tomatoes are undenial weak, due to the general repo of large pack. Old goods can bought around 85 cents, f. o. Baltimore or factory, and ne pack goods for immediate sh ment are quoted at 87½ cen f. o. b. Future tomatoes a quoted around 85 cents, f. o. The demand for tomatoes is lig and the trade are waiting for t lower prices which they seem think are sure to come. T undertone, both spot and futu is unquestionably soft. Corn quiet, but the market seems to in generally good condition. T pack of shoepeg is likely to small, and the acreage in all li has been greatly reduced t ar. Prices show no change in y line. Peas are strong. There e almost no old peas about. ıe new pack is now being de-ered and shows great uneven-ss as to grade. Small sizes are enty, but large sizes scarce. ɔ sales of peaches at the high ening prices have as yet been ade, so far as can be learned. ıe season is late, and pack pros-cts slim. Apples are un-anged. The demand is slow. ıe general California line shows change. Most staple lines ve been withdrawn. The line small Baltimore canned goods unchanged and in light de-ınd.

Fish.

The only business doing in fish the present time is in new ackerel. New fish is available some quantities from all arters—our own shores, Nor-ıy and Ireland. New catch ores are scarce and the price gh. Irish and Norway fish are t unduly high in price and are ınted to some extent. Domestic rdines are unchanged, but ady to firm. The demand is r. Imported sardines are un-anged and moderately active. lmon are selling fairly well at changed prices, except as to tain brands of red Alaska, ich show a slight advance.

Dried Fruits.

Prunes are unchanged and very iet. This applies both to spot d future goods. The market is ly maintained, however. aches are unchanged, and most ckers refuse to offer. Nothing ing in Apricots. Raisins are changed, both coast and spot, d the demand is very light, but expected to improve within two eks. Currants are unchanged d in usual demand from the kers' supply trade. Apples are n and unchanged.

Beans and Peas.

Pea beans are unchanged and light demand. Marrows are changed and quiet. California as are nominally unchanged, on spot can be shaded. The st market is unchanged. Split s are unchanged and wanted. een splits are about out of the rket. Scotch peas are quoted $2 and green dried peas almost much.

Butter.

The butter market remains ut on last week's basis. Pres-ent receipts are showing season-able defects, and perfect goods are scarce and well held. There is some accumulation of under grades, which are offered at re-duced prices. The consumptive as well as the speculative demand is good and the outlook for the coming week is for a firm market at probably unchanged prices. The make of near-by butter is fall-ing off, but the Western make shows no change as yet.

Eggs.

The egg market is firm at the recent advance of 1 cent per dozen. The bulk of the present receipts are showing hot weather defects and have to be sold at con-cessions. Strictly fancy eggs, free from heat, are very scarce and command a premium of 1 to 2 cents per dozen over the market price. Present conditions are likely to continue for a month, after which there will likely be an increased supply and better qual-ity. The outlook for the coming week is for continued scarcity and high prices.

Cheese.

The cheese market is still dull. Prices have declined about ½ cent on all grades during the week, but are still 10 per cent. above normal. The consumptive demand is very good and while speculators are a little slow to take hold at ruling prices, present conditions are likely to continue until cold weather comes and factories can make cheese fine enough to be sold for winter use. Very few part skin cheese is being made and those few are selling about 2 cents below the best. The bulk of the present receipts are showing hot weather defects, and very few cheese are good enough to bring the market price. The present outlook, however, is for lower prices.

Provisions.

The provision market is about unchanged. Prices on everything in the smoked meat line are un-changed and the demand is about the average for the season. Pres-ent conditions are likely to exist for the balance of the summer. There is practically no change in barrel pork, canned meats or dried beef. The demand is good, but prices on all these lines are above normal. The market is only steady and declines need not be unexpected. Both pure and compound lard is still unchanged in the East. In the West, how-

Hams and Bacon Are in Demand

Are you giving your trade the best values for their money? You can easily do so by giving the people what they want and that is which are plump, have short shanks and round butts, are sweet, being sugar-cured; mild, because they are not old, and of fine flavor, being smoked a nice bright color, which is only possible by using hickory wood.

They are sold by the leading retail grocers in Philadelphia, having the most select and exacting trade.

Burk's "BUTTERNUT" Bacon

is the only substitute for "Crown Brand" Hams. It is selected from corn-fed hogs, specially cured with granulated sugar, mild and of exquisite flavor and taste.

It is put up in narrow strips, strung with white cord, cut absolutely square, making any waste im-possible; wrapped in highly glazed and parchment paper and embellished on two sides with an attrac-tive blue and white label.

A red seal is attached to the cord, stating the specific merits of this bacon, which is also known to the trade as the "5-B" Bacon, because of its name.

Burk's Butternut BONELESS Breakfast BACON

This Bacon was first introduced at the National Export Exposition, held in Philadelphia in 1899, and it is largely due to its ever-increasing popularity that

MARKET NOTES.

Arizona cantaloupes average $3.50 per crate and are wanted. The quality is good. North Carolina cantaloupes average $1.50. and New Jerseys about $1. The Western fruit is by far the best coming.

Peaches are coming to the Eastern market from various sources. Oklahoma is shipping as far East as Philadelphia, and the fruit is selling at $2.50 to $2.75. These peaches are packed in 6-basket crates. California peaches, mostly Crawfords, range from $1.25 to $1.50 per crate. Georgia peaches are about done. A few are about at $1.50 to $2. Some are also coming from Arkansas, being packed in a larger package and ranging from $3 to $3.50. Delaware peaches range from $1.25 to $1.50 and will probably not get much below that range during the season.

Watermelons keep high, the range being 20 to 50 cents each. Melons are coming both from Georgia and North Carolina. The outlook for the New Jersey watermelon crop is large.

Tomatoes are coming plentifully from near-by points, and canners are getting all they need for 25 cents per basket. A fair jobbing quotation is 20 to 30 cents for first earlies and 75 cents for second earlies. The demand is good and the outlook for a big crop.

Lima beans are now coming from near-by points. The range in price is $1.25 to $1.50 and the quality is very fair. North Carolina is also shipping limas North at $1.50 in ⅓-barrel baskets.

Corn keeps up. Good sugar corn ranges from 80 cents to $1. Near-by points are all shipping now and the demand is active.

AMONG THE TRADE.

A price of $4.95 per barrel was named on new rolled oats during the past week. Shipment will begin within the next few weeks. The new prices are about 40 cents below the prevailing spot prices.

Apple Crop Looks Small.

Green Apple Men and Evaporators Compete for Fruit and the Result Is High Prices for Both.

Advices from the principal apple growing districts which has reached the "Grocery World" during the week indicates a short crop and high prices throughout the season. A large New York State packer wrote his Philadelphia representative during the week that the Government prophecy for the 1907 crop was 44 per cent., against 70 per cent. last year, and an average of 65 per cent. for the last ten years. This concern also stated that green apple buyers were in the primary markets, buying all the fruit they could get, and paying as high as $4 per barrel for it. This caused the evaporators to pay a high price and thus directly affect the price of evaporated apples.

The present quotation on evaporated apples in cartons is about 9½ cents per pound, which is 1½ cents per pound above normal.

Useful Facts About Groceries

The department which will henceforth be conducted under the above head is be explained by the letter which appears below, and which was recently sent to t "Grocery World." In the hope that a little such matter may be of interest and val to "Grocery World" readers, a short educational article along the lines indicated w appear under this head from time to time.

Vermontville, N. Y.

Editor "Grocery World."

Dear Sir:—I have long wanted a book which would be a sort of encyclopædia, one that would take a certain article, describe it, tell where it grew, how it was prepared for market, what season of the year it was marketed, how it should be stored, whether in a cold or warm place.

Such a book was published once, but as near as I can find out it is out of print now.

I was thinking if the "Grocery World" could devote, say, half a column a week to a work of this kind we would have, in a little while, the long-looked-for work.

But I won't ask for too much, for we are getting good things all the time.

Very truly yours, N. H. BRECKENRIDGE.

Glucose or Starch Sugar.

Liquid glucose is a very thick white, or water-colored, sweet syrup, obtained from the starch of wheat, potatoes, also from wood and other vegetable substances; but chiefly from yellow maize (Indian corn). Liquid glucose is usually made much thicker than treacle, and may be rolled in cold wet hands and thrown like a snowball. Immense quantities are made, especially in America. Technically it is known as a mixture in varying proportions of two sugars called dextrose and maltose, and of dextrine, or starch gum, by submitting them to the action of sulphuric acid. Glucose is also used by tanners for the "weighting" of leather, as well as for the production of alcohol, for fermenting purposes, and particularly by brewers in sweetening beer and pale ale. The saccharine property was first discovered in grapes, and in its solid crystallized state is better known as grape sugar, while glucose is the name properly applied to the liquid form.

It matters not, however, from what material the starch is obtained so far as the quality of the glucose is concerned. It has been made from chips, sawdust and shavings, and the chemical composition is invariably the same; but yellow maize seems to be the most convenient material for making large quantities. In the process of manufacture the starch is usually boiled with sulphuric acid and water, and the mixture instead of being very sour, found to be fairly sweet.

The acid changes the starch sugar, but is not itself affected in the least. Powdered chalk then thrown in, which unites with the acid and settles to the bottom leaving a clear, sweet solution liquid glucose. It is perfect harmless, and even nutritious but is nevertheless only a fa titious sweetening article. The is a considerable difference b tween brands of glucose, in fa no two firms make the same so They may be the same color a guaranteed 44 degrees, but r really of the same strength.

THE SCIENCE OF ADVERTISING

This Department is devoted to the criticism advertising matter sent in, to the devising new advertising ideas for special occasions, on request, and to the suggesting of original advertisements when data is supplied. All communications sent in for this Department should be addressed to the Editor of Science Advertising. They will be filed in their order and taken up according to strict rotation.

Philadelphia, July 29, 1907.
Editor "Science of Advertising."

Dear Sir:—I inclose a few clippings from our adv. sheet for your criticism. I write some of the ads. for the company and would be glad of your opinions of descriptive advertising. Some think nothing is necessary only a sheet full of names of goods with figures and stamps, but my argument is that successful advertising must be put in type so as to convince the people of quality first and then a price which to them seems reasonable enough to be an interesting investment.

Yours respectfully,
W. PARK,

The price is cut and a special Stamp inducement besides. Any kind you want, Black or Mixed, Assam, Japan, Imperial, &c. All of them are good, and the Diamond Stamps are good as gold.

The George M. Dunlap Co. operates a good-sized chain of Philadelphia retail grocery stores. Mr. Park sends in quite a batch of advertising clippings. I take from them what I consider the best and reproduce it on a smaller scale than the original. This measured 10 inches in the original, single column, though the column was wider than the average newspaper column.

In my judgment, this correspondent is absolutely right in his argument that an advertisement needs to be more than names and prices. I have kept pretty close to the advertising business for several years, and I have never known an advertiser who stuck to that method to get very big. You must give the public something more about your goods than the names and the prices. I think the advertisements sent me are very fair. There are some typographical errors, which show bad proofreading, but the general effect is snappy. For the sort of stores this advertising is intended to exploit—chain stores doing a cash business and pushing trading stamps, this advertising is probably just about what it ought to be. The other clippings which I do not reproduce are written along the same lines and are almost as good.

Let me have more matter, please.

Booth & Co., Fish Dealers, Indicted.

Indictments were returned during the week in the United States District Court at Chicago against A. Booth & Co., generally known as the "Fish Trust," the New York, Chicago and St. Louis Railroad Co. and the Lehigh Valley Railroad Co. charging them with violation of the first provision of the Elkins law prohibiting rebating. The indictment returned against A. Booth & Co. contains seventy-five counts; that against the New York, Chicago and St. Louis Railroad Co. fifty-one counts, and a joint indictment against the New York, Chicago and St. Louis Railroad, and the Lehigh Valley road contains fifty-four counts. If found guilty, the corporations are liable to a fine of from $1,000 to $20,000 for each offense. It is claimed by Government officials that A. Booth & Co. organized the Overland Refrigerator Express Co. which operated under a lease from Booth & Co. certain refrigerator cars and collected from the railroads mileage for the use of the cars and commissions on the amount of freight collected for property transported in them. It is also claimed by the Government that the express company was actually operated by A. Booth & Co. and that the moneys received by it from the railroad companies were turned over to Booth & Co. in the guise of rentals of cars leased by Booth & Co. to the express company.

Another Fruit Concern Needs No Preservatives.

Well-known California Fruit Packer Writes the "Grocery World," Apropos of the Heinz Contention That Preservatives Are Unnecessary, That He Has Never Used Them Either.

Touching the article recently published in the "Grocery World" by the manager of the H. J. Heinz Co., claiming that the use of preservatives in food was wholly unnecessary, and the "Grocery World's" editorial comment thereon, a well-known California packer of fruit products writes the "Grocery World," joining his testimony to that of the Heinz Co., that all manner of fruits can be packed without artificial preservatives. His letter, which is an interesting contribution to the discussion of the subject, follows:

Redlands, Cal., August 1, 1907.
Editor "Grocery World."

Dear Sir:—I have just been interested in reading in your paper of July 29th the article by the general manager of the H. J. Heinz Co., in regard to the fact that preservatives are not necessary in food products. I have also read your editorial article in the same number on this topic.

Now, we are not as large a concern as the H. J. Heinz Co., nor do we manufacture as large a line of goods, but we have for a number of years put up marmalades, fruit jams and bottled fruit juices without the use of any preservative whatever and we have done this successfully, which fact I took occasion to state to the National Association of Food Manufacturers when it sent its last inquiry in regard to this point. There is no secret process involved in putting up these food products without a preservative, as Mr. Mueller, of the Heinz Co., will doubtless tell you unless it is a fact that the majority of food manufacturers have so long used preservatives that they have forgotten that sound fruit cooked with pure sugar needs no preservative to keep it from spoiling.

I have no disposition to complicate the preservative question, but merely wish to add my mite of testimony to the effect that food products can be put up so that they will keep without the use of any preservative.

Yours very truly,
H. P. KINGSBURY.

Read the Point In Large Type

Here's the proposition of James T. Shinn's Liquid Rennet in a nutshell:—

1. It is the cleanest rennet made.
2. It coagulates milk in 2 to 5 minutes.
3. It will not spoil.
4. Every bottle is guaranteed.
5. Jobbers everywhere indorse it.

And last, but not least—this is in large type because it's a large point—it pays 100 per cent. profit. Costs $1.50, sells for $3.00.

What Full Delivery Means

When you buy future canned goods from your jobber on the ordinary contract you're never sure of getting them till they're in your store. And neither is the jobber, when he buys futures on the ordinary contract.

But both of you get the full 100 per cent.—every can you buy—when the jobber buys Blue Bell and Clover Farm, for we sell them to him only on a contract guaranteeing full 100 per cent. deliveries.

These brands represent the best tomatoes and corn of their grade packed in Maryland.

Don't You Believe "There's Nothing in a Name"

Because there is. If you see De Rago on a bottle of olive oil it means that the oil has been pressed only from perfect olives. Instead of beating the trees to get the fruit for De Rago Oil, and squeezing everything that falls from the trees and bottling it, for De Rago Olive Oil the olives are picked—only the perfect ones—and the result is perfect oil.

It's the kind infants and invalids can take into their delicate stomachs and thrive on.

Sell De Rago—push it—and watch your trade, for it increases.

BELL'S SEASONING

The perfect seasoning demands more herbs than most housewives will use—we touched on this in our last advertisement. Very few home cooks will use more than two or three garden herbs to season meats or poultry or soups. "Oh, that's enough," they say, and besides, they're afraid to spoil the dish by using more.

This one reason alone makes Bell's Spiced Seasoning five times as good as the finest home-made seasoning. It contains all the herbs and spices that were made to go together, blended exactly right. The result is an indescribable savor that permeates the whole dish.

Not one woman out of ten will go back to her own seasoning after trying Bell's Spiced Seasoning. Her family wouldn't let her, but she wouldn't anyway, because Bell's is so much easier to use.

Twenty-four Out of a Thousand.

I got up against an insurance man the other day who told me how the demand for health insurance had grown in the last ten years. A man who has health insurance gets so much a week while he is sick. Some companies pay you no matter what you're sick from, while others pay you only if you get leprosy or yellow fever.

This fellow was a sort of district manager for one of the large companies and he had his health insurance customers tabulated according to business.

"How many grocers have you got?" I asked.

He ran his finger down the list.

"Twenty-four," he said.

"How many grocers do you suppose there are in your whole territory?" I asked him.

"Well, I don't know exactly," he said, "but I should suppose there ought to be a thousand anyway, from what I know of the number of business men in other lines."

"Have you tried to get 'em in?" I asked.

"Sure," he replied, "not especially, of course—we try to get everybody in. But you take the average grocer—he thinks if he carries fire and life insurance he's doing enough."

But he ain't, dearly beloved brethren, and I'm going to sweat some to prove it to you.

Take a case I know of right now. A young grocer up in the Pennsylvania coal regions. Got a crack-a-jack store. Business man from the head down. Got no children and his wife keeps his books besides helping behind the counter when she can.

They keep two other clerks, both young fellows, no particular good except to do what they're told.

About three months ago this grocer took down with typhoid fever. His wife wouldn't hear to the trained nurse that the doctor wanted. They couldn't afford it she said, and besides she wanted to nurse her husband herself. That, of course, took both her husband's and her own services from the store.

He had a mighty bad case of fever. Just when it was coming 'round all right it ran into pneumonia, and they had another long siege with that. There were some other complications, too, I believe.

That fellow hasn't really gotten around yet. During the first few weeks his wife looked out for the store and managed to keep things going after a fashion, but as the patient got worse she had to let the store go. And the store did go—it darned near went into the ground. The two young clerks did all they could—they certainly did stand by the ship, but they knew nothing about actually running the business. They tried to get another man who would know how to run it, and they had about four in there one after another but expenses were running up, so that they couldn't afford to get the sort of fellow they ought to have had, and the situation really got pretty wobbly.

Naturally the business ran down. Both the husband and wife had worked hard, and one extra man couldn't do all they had done together. Two extra men were out of the question, on account of the expense. There was nobody to do the buying, the husband was out of the question and his wife worried half to death and so distracted that she wasn't any good at all outside the sick room.

So the stock got mighty ragged and the store down at the heel in a dozen ways.

Did this grocer carry any health insurance?

He did not.

You see what this meant to the store—it meant carrying the extra load of another clerk—and not a good enough one to really hold things in shape—besides the extra expense of doctors' bills and medicines.

Even if the business had held together it couldn't have stood it. But it didn't hold together; it fell away pretty badly. The poor devil, just getting round again, finds a pretty steep climb before him. He'll make it, I have no doubt of that, for he's a winner, but it's put him back two years at least.

Now.

Just suppose that fellow had spent $50 or $75 a year on health insurance, which would have meant, so the insurance man said, that they would have paid him $50 a week every week he was sick!

Just think of it—by gad, it would have paid him to be sick!

All the doctor's bills paid for, all the medicines, and enough left to send to the city and hire the right sort of a man.

None of the worry that the doctor said kept the fellow back for weeks—everything running all right—store completely off his mind.

That's being sick in peace! But imagine the mental condition of a man who knows that he's flat on his back for weeks with not a soul to look after a business that can't look after itself and with nothing on earth outside of the business.

How many of you fellows would be in any better shape than this young friend of mine, if you got down in your beds for weeks or months?

A lot of you would, I know, for you've been able to organize your business and have men in with you to run them if you're out.

But what about the thousands of you who run your own stores and have nobody else to do it? Could your business stand double the load it's carrying to-day? Could you go down on your back for three months and feel confident things were moving smoothly?

If you could, you've got a wonderful business, brother, and you can pat yourself on the back.

I imagine it must be real comfortable to lie in bed at the first end of a long sickness and be able to feel "well we've got enough extra money coming in to pay all expenses, anyway."

I want you fellows to think this over.

Failures for July, 1907.

Grocery and General Store Disasters for Last Month in Comparison with Same Month of 1906.

The official figures covering grocery and general store failures for the month of July, 1907, show no radical departure from the records of the same month of the year before.

The compilation of R. G. Dun & Co. is as follows:—

General Stores—In July, 1907, 72 failures; liabilities, $711,01[illegible] July, 1906, 67 failures; liabilities $311,518.

Groceries—In July, 1907, 15 failures; liabilities, $485,860. In July, 1906, 173 failures; liabilities $371,251.

California pears range from $ to $3.50 and are wanted in moderate quantities.

Two-Minute Sermons for the Retail Grocer

V.—When Gossip Brings Business.

Can you make the women say good things about you?

Some advertising is very expensive and some is very cheap, and in many cases the cheapest is the best. For instance, the gossip of the women of your section. You will never be able to buy better advertising than this same gossip, but the gossip must be in favor of your goods, and not to their detriment, for this latter kind of gossip is one of the hardest things that any merchant can have to overcome. Gossip always creates prejudice, one way or the other, and there always will be gossip.

If a merchant could get an unlimited quantity of favorable gossip about his goods, he would need no other kind of advertising to make his business a success but in order to get such favorable gossip he finds it necessary to do many kinds of advertising and then always have his goods live strictly up to the advertised description.

Some advertisers waste almost all the money they invest in advertising, while others get good returns from every dollar so invested. It is a part of every business which should have the time and attention of the brightest men, and it can be extended in almost all directions, but it is well for the advertiser to always bear in mind that advertising which will make the women gossip favorably is a kind which is sure to do good work, no matter what it costs.

Window Dressing for Grocers

In this department from now on will appear each week suggestive articles regarding the proper use of the retail grocer's window. An endeavor will be made to deal with the subject practically, in other words, to show grocers how they can turn their windows into a money-making feature of their business. Subscribers are invited to make free use of the department by submitting both queries or suggestions.

Root Beer Window.

Place a three or five-gallon empty keg in centre of window on a box. Have a spigot fastened to keg and underneath have a tumbler. By taking a glass of water and pouring a little root beer extract in same and mix will give the appearance of root beer. Then have four pyramids of root beer in cartons. In back have two heaps of sugar, six bags on each. The lower centre bag have filled with brown sugar, and have some sugar to show in the window. The rest of the bags are filled with sawdust.

To the front of the window have bottles of extract of root beer out of cartons and distribute packages of hops between the bottles.

This will greatly increase your sale of root beer.

Another Suit Against the Sugar Trust.

A bill in equity which calls upon the American Sugar Refining Co. to give an accounting of its business for the past four years was filed before the New Jersey State Courts last week on behalf of George H. Earle, Jr., receiver of the Pennsylvania Sugar Refining Co., of Philadelphia. The suit, it is said, is the only one of the kind ever filed in this country and the step taken by the receiver of the Pennsylvania Co. may be the means of opening an entire new field for investigating the trusts. The suit is separate from that for $30,000,000 damages which Mr. Earle instituted against the American Sugar Refining Co. in New York. Mr. Earle, who was appointed ancillary receiver for the Pennsylvania Sugar Refining Co. in New Jersey, seeks by his suit to compel the American Refining Co. to make an accounting of its profits since December 13, 1903, when it secured control of the Pennsylvania Co.

More About an Old Collecting Agency Scheme.

Marysville, Ohio, Aug. 5, 1907.
Editor "Grocery World."

Dear Sir:—I have been a reader of your journal for a number of years and found many valuable items in it that have benefited me more than once. I have read many times about advices in regards to collecting agencies. I inclose a clipping taken from the Cincinnati "Packer" exposing the Sprague Collecting Agency—perhaps it will help some reader of this journal and save him a few dollars.

Yours truly,
L. H. MILLER.

The Sprague Collection Agency of Chicago has been shown up in the "Grocery World" several times. Not in the last year or two, however, as the writer had information that the concern had cut the East out of its territory. The correctness of this information is borne out by the clipping which the above correspondent sends, and which is dated Fort Worth, Texas. A part of it is reproduced for general information:

> Fort Worth, Texas, July 27.—Hundreds of different classes of business people throughout this territory who have been duped by the Sprague Mercantile Agency, a fake collection scheme operated from 184 La Salle street, Chicago, have abundant reason to wish they had subscribed for "The Packer" right along and had read and heeded the series of articles published a year or two ago in this paper relative to the clever confidence game worked by the "unspeakable Sprague."
> A gentleman here who has traveled all over the Southwest stated a few days ago that the Sprague agency is operating that greatest fake game ever perpetrated on the American people. In talking about the outfit he said: "They have grafted the bankers, wholesale merchants, retailers, manufacturers, produce dealers, doctors and school teachers all through the Central and and Southwestern States and have even gone over into Mexico.
> "I think they have made a rich harvest in Kansas, Arkansas, Oklahoma, Texas and Missouri. A firm in Kansas had a contract with them and paid $100 of good money and turned over accounts and notes to the Sprague outfit for collection and they made collection from one party I know of, for this party made payment on his account and he also gave me a letter he received from Sprague, and also the receipt showing payment in full had been made to Sprague. Several months after the Sprague agency issued this receipt they wrote a letter to the merchant who paid them $100 to get their matchless collection service that they had never received one cent from the party in question. I have letters from the merchant and I hold receipt Sprague issued together with their letter denying having made collection.
> "Merchants and small jobbers all over the country have had trouble of the same kind. The merchants in Fort Worth, Dallas and other cities have been grafted to the limit, and some of them have not yet awakened to the fact that Sprague is not turning over whatever money they may collect. It is understood a banker and some other parties had to go to Chicago some time ago and make a demand on the Sprague agency for money they had collected on claims that had been turned over to them on old debts and claims but which they refused to settle for until forced to do it." The gentleman above referred to is J. W. Brown, who may be reached care of Hotel Melba.
> The proposition of the agency is to pay $100 as a retainer fee for a period of three years and to allow the Sprague agency a commission of 10 per cent. for any old debts or bad claims you may have and which Sprague may collect. Another proposition is to pay Sprague $50 for a three years' retainer fee to cover incidentals and allow Sprague to keep 20 per cent. commissions on any claims collected.

Three Reports of the Baltimore Canned Goods Market.

No. 1.

Baltimore, Md., Aug. 9, 1907.
Editor "Grocery World."

Dear Sir:—The canning of new tomatoes in this market is increasing, and the canners here anticipate a very active month in them. Up to this date the bulk of the pack has been No. 2 seconds, No. 3 seconds and No. 2 standards to fill the early demand for those grades for prompt shipment because of the scarcity of them, the old stock being entirely sold out in this market. Some No. 3 standards were packed and in the coming week the output of them will increase materially and shipments can be made promptly. In view of that fact the jobbers are now sending in their orders for shipment as soon as packed, and it looks like this market will be the chief source of supply during this month. Unless something unforeseen or unanticipated happens to the crop the results of the season will be highly satisfactory.

String beans show decided strength and the demand is very good for the cheap grades of seconds peas and the low-priced standards and Early June peas. Future corn, as well as spot corn, is very firm, and all the pessimistic talk concerning that article has stopped. There is hardly an article in the whole line of canned vegetables that does not participate more or less in the demand for prompt as well as for future shipment.

The packing of new peaches up to this date is a disappointment to the canners, and the demand for all grades continues to exceed the supply. This is certainly a "eating year" for every kind of fruit in its fresh state, and the shippers of green fruits are reaping the benefit of it to the detriment of the canner. Their large purchases of fruits for immediate consumption in this season of short crops has been the chief cause of the extraordinary advances in the prices of the canned article, and, also, they remove the chances of lower prices later on because the goods are consumed not canned and stored away for speculative purpose. Perhaps housekeepers have this season done less than ever of preserving at home of the fruits that come to market so far, and the promise of the peach, pear and apple crop certainly is not hopeful for them. About as fast as new peaches of each size and grade are canned and ready for shipment the demand absorbs them, and up to this time it has been a question more of getting the goods than of getting prices on them. It is expected that the output will be increased during August, but the demand for them has not yet reached its maximum. The same unfavorable reports are made concerning the crops of apples and pears. Pineapples are firmer with a decidedly upward tendency as to prices. Standard straw

Sugar Refiners Abandon Bluing of Suga

Fearing Effect of Food Law, They Give Up Custom Which Ha Been Universal for Years. Decided Last Spring to Graduall Eliminate Blue So That by Fall It Would All Be Gon Without Trade Having Noticed the Change.

An interesting fact learned during the week is that all sugar refiners have practically abandoned the practice of bluing sugar, and are now shipping sugar to the trade almost in its natural condition. This is in order to keep clear of complications under the food law.

For years it has been the universal practice of sugar refiners to color granulated sugar with ultramarine blue. How the custom arose is in doubt, but it is said to have been brought about by competition. Sugar for all points of the United States save Ohio has been treated in this fashion, the food laws of the State named having been enforced against it. The natural color of granulated sugar is yellowish, while treatment with blue gives a beautiful bluish white.

When former Dairy and Food Commissioner Warren resigned his office last spring he was in the midst of an investigation into the use of blue by the sugar refiners and the chance is that if he had held the office prosecutions would have been begun against the local refiners. Just about that time however, the refiners decided that they were running a risk and arranged to gradually decrease the amount of bluing used so that by October 1, 1907, the entire amount would be eliminated, the change being made so gradually that none would notice. This plan was carried out, and the sugar shipped now is almost free from bluing. In a few weeks it will be wholly so, and few will be the wiser and nobody worse off.

The little round cracker with "Exton" stamped on it. It has been on the market over half a century, and no consumer will use any other oyster cracker if she can get the Exton, because no oyster cracker can take its place in the esteem of those who know the difference between fair and good.

berries again advanced and black-berries followed suit. Rasp-berries are very scarce and very high and blueberries will cut a very small figure this season. Cherries are already sold out.

Yours truly,
THOS. J. MEEHAN & Co.

No. 2.

Aberdeen, Md., Aug. 8, 1907.
Editor "Grocery World."

Dear Sir:—Which is the best policy? Shall we go on as has been customary or shall we ex-pend all energies in endeavoring to introduce canned goods into localities where they have not been to any degree worthy of con-sideration heretofore? Three cans of tomatoes to every man, woman and child in this country is offered as their share of the quantity that should be requisite as an article of diet in comparison with other commodities, which are not so healthful, nourishing and appetizing.

The packer ofttimes discour-ages his neighbor and his neigh-bor's neighbor from engaging in the packing business, because he fears there will be too many arti-cles canned. The jobber fre-quently holds out the flag of over-production to disadvantage as far as increased consumption is con-cerned, and although this might enable him to bear prices some-what, yet if the same energy were spent in the line favorable towards increased consumption, would not he be able to pay full prices to better advantage and his net annual profit so much larger on account of having handled a greater volume of canned goods? To watch competitor with eagle eye is contrary to the "live and let live" policy and is about as much of a mistaken position as the non-welcome of any new arrivals in a community for fear the food supply would not hold out and there would not be sufficient for all. Population might increase and double and yet there is always enough to eat. Packers and jobbers could easily be doubled in number and still there would be sufficient pur-chasers to keep all busy if ener-gies were expended in the direc-tion of increased consumption rather than towards possibilities of over-production and keeping the other fellow out of the busi-ness.

Yours truly,
STRASBAUGH, SILVER & Co.

No. 3.

Baltimore, Md., Aug. 9, 1907.
Editor "Grocery World."

Dear Sir:—The easier feeling in spot tomatoes is giving buyers the opportunity of buying what tomatoes they will need before the delivery of their future con-tracts at considerably lower prices than seemed likely some time ago. There is quite a fair demand for spot tomatoes, principally No. 3 standards.

The crop conditions are re-ported excellent, but the season will be late. Though there has been very little business done on future tomatoes during the past six weeks, yet packers are not pushing them and seem to be per-fectly satisfied to wait until they have begun packing and get a sur-plus before making further sales. The heavy sales which most packers have made will enable them to rest on their oars until they actually get the goods in hand. It does not look now as though the country packers will be able to make large deliveries much before September 1st.

We are having a heavy inquiry for peaches from all sections, and there is every reason to believe that there would easily be an out-let this year for record-breaking crop. The prospects, however, are not very good for peaches in this section, and it looks as though from reports coming in from peach growers that there will be a comparatively light crop. A small quantity of peaches has been packed here, but the quan-tity has been so small that they have been snapped up from day to day, and it is hardly worth while to quote them out in a gen-eral way.

The market has taken quite a jump on blackberries and closes at 75 cents per dozen for No. 2 standards.

A few blackberries are still being packed, but the season has been quite a disappointment and the market is in strong shape.

Cheap peas are selling freely. Seconds and standards are going out in a way to indicate a bare market before long.

There are no raspberries or red cherries here. Water straw-berries have been cleaned up under $1.10. Gooseberries are held in light supply. Fancy pre-served strawberries are not at all plentiful. Stocks of all kinds of gallon goods are light.

Yours truly,
THOS. G. CRANWELL & Co.

Definite News of the Union Mercantile Agency.

Allegheny, Pa., Aug. 5, 1907.
Editor "Grocery World."

Dear Sir:—In the August 5th issue of the "Grocery World," under heading of Correspondence, on page 27, I noticed a communi-cation from Coatesville, Pa., mak-ing inquiry as to the Union Mer-cantile Agency, of Bridgeport, Conn.

In reply, and for such informa-tion as those who may make in-quiry hereafter of the Union Mer-cantile Agency's system of col-lecting delinquent accounts, I beg to advise that during my ten weeks' stay at Harrisburg work-ing on the garnishee and pure food bills, representing the retail mer-chants of Southwestern Pennsyl-vania, I made my headquarters or office in Secretary R. F. Cook's office at Harrisburg, Pa. I care-fully watched the workings of this collecting system of the Union Mercantile Agency, of Bridge-port, Conn., under the supervision of Mr. R. F. Cook, secretary of the Harrisburg Business Men's Association. He showed me ac-counts that this company had col-lected for him that they had tried three different collecting agencies and they all failed to bring any re-turns until he placed his accounts in the hands of the Union Mer-cantile Agency.

We have installed their system of collecting delinquent accounts in this city, and from a thorough investigation of their methods I firmly believe that they will be able to give us equally as good returns as they made for Mr. Cook. They collected in six months' time for Mr. Cook be-tween $22,000 and $23,000 of de-linquent accounts.

Their method is so much differ-ent from any collecting agency's proposition that I feel confident that any one desiring or interested in collection of delinquent ac-counts will get good results through the Union Mercantile Agency.

If the Coatesville, Pa., party desires any further information I would be very glad to extend to him the same upon request.

Yours truly,
JOSEPH C. KANE,
Secretary.

NOT A BETTER PLACE ON EARTH for a wholesale grocery house than Astoria, Ore. Live wire could control Alaskan trade. Two-thirds of the people of the world live on the Pacific shores; they all make regular business of eating. Young hustler ought to start co-operative company, or promote and locate it here. You would double your dollars in this business first year. Write Chamber of Commerce, Room 797, Astoria, Ore., for particulars. Remember, Astoria is only deep-water port on Columbia River, and is one of only five on Pacific coast.

It Brings People Back to You

Spring Garden Tea has a quality and flavor so seldom equalled in a blend of tea that people who have tried it are hard to sell anything else to.

As you can get 60 cents per pound for it, making 160 per cent. profit, you shouldn't want to sell them anything else. Our price to you:

In 100-lb. Barrels	18	cents per lb. net
In 5-lb. Silver Bags	19	cents per lb. net
In 1-lb. Silver Bags	19½	cents per lb. net
In ½-lb. Silver Bags	20	cents per lb. net
In ¼-lb. Silver Bags	21	cents per lb. net

Packed in cases containing 100 Pounds

Thomas Martindale & Co., Philadelphia, Pa.

What's in a Name?

We'll tell you. We have picked out the name Apelpi for our Evaporated Apples, so that every time it is thought of particular people will think of the finest fruit of this kind ever put on the market.

We have adopted the sentence, "The bottom as good as the top," because that is unusual with evaporated apples, and we pride ourselves on the fact that it applies to ours. Put them in, and your troubles in this direction are over.

This Sells Itself

The finest and strongest celery salt procurable, packed in a tasty shaker like that shown in the cut.

These shakers will move out of your store in a regular little army. For everybody uses celery salt and everybody would rather use it from a shaker than in any other way.

Absolutely pure, like everything else made by this house for 95 years.

Ritter's Guaranty

In compliance with the rules and regulations for the enforcement of the Food and Drugs Act published by the Commission appointed for this purpose, we have filed a guaranty covering all our products with the Agricultural Department in Washington under the serial number 1017.

In the future all our products will be labeled in accordance with Regulation Nine as follows: Guaranteed under the Food and Drugs Act, June 30, 1906, No. 1017.

This guaranty is sufficient and covers every sale we make and no individual guaranties are necessary.

It has always been our aim to manufacture pure and wholesome food, to comply with existing laws and to protect all who buy our products, and we shall carry out this principle in the future.

We hope to deserve your continued confidence and patronage.

Bought Simply. Because She Liked the Glass Package

It's odd what little things make sales sometimes. A grocer told us the other day that the day before a woman had bought a jar of Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa simply because she liked the novelty of the glass package. She didn't ask any questions about the peculiar characteristics of the cocoa; she liked the glass jar and bought.

There is a point in that for grocers who study the public—the useful novelty is usually the seller.

Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa, the only cocoa packed in glass, has a smoother flavor than any other cocoa made. That is because our exclusive process of making takes out certain substances that other manufacturers leave in.

Will you mention the "Grocery World" when you write?

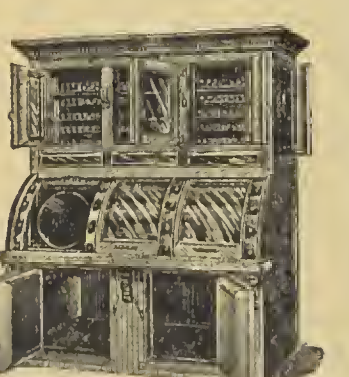
You Buy Ice Don't You?



Then it is an expense in your business, and if cut down, will increase your profits.

Hill's Refrigerators are as handsome as the handsomest, but they are not sold on that—they are sold on the fact that our patented system of refrigeration—applied to Hill's Refrigerators only—allows a colder, drier temperature, with a 20 per cent. saving in ice bills.

They Wouldn't Imitate It If It Wasn't So Good

The Ramly Cigarette is the finest 10c. Turkish cigarette ever made. It is so good other manufacturers try to make their goods look like the Ramly, but there the similarity ends.

If you want to get a run on cigarettes, get people to go out of their way to come to you, put in the Ramly. Remember how it is spelled—R-A-M-L-Y.

Certainly You Can Sell Soft Drinks

We believe the grocer who says he can't sell soft drinks is mistaken. Our experience teaches us that every grocer in business can sell some kind of soft drink.

But if he is to sell much he must sell the kind that brings the drinker back—Clicquot Club Ginger Ale, for instance, a thoroughbred, absolutely pure, delicious drink, just as satisfactory to the epicure as to the man of uncultivated palate.

Every day we do something to increase the demand for Clicquot Club Ginger Ale—advertise somewhere, or work some plan to bring orders to your door.

A superfine article that is being constantly pushed by the manufacturers is a pretty good article to sell.

The equal of the finest imported Ginger Ale. Made from pure water by experts in the finest factory in America.

"Is This What I Made?"

If the cook who invented Baked Beans with tomato sauce were to come back and open up some of the cans labeled Baked Beans he would go gladly back to oblivion.

For "Baked Beans" doesn't always mean baked beans any more. In most cases it means beans boiled or steamed, dampened with a little cheap catsup and packed. The result is an attempted fraud on the palate of him who knows the real thing.

L. & S. Baked Beans are really baked in the good new way. We guarantee that absolutely. Baking makes the bean over. Instead of swelling and mushing it up like steaming or boiling, it leaves it just as firm but mealy and melting.

And our tomato sauce is tomato sauce made by an expert.

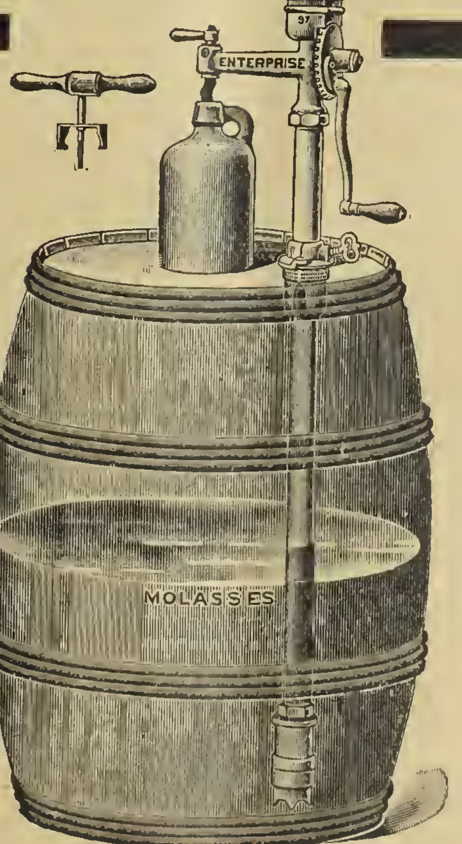
With New Total Registering Device



The saving of time will doubly pay for it.

The convenience alone will make it worth all it costs.

It is cleaner, as it dispenses with the use of measures and the consequent absence of flies and dirt.

SELF-PRIMING and MEASURING PUMP

Accurately measures molasses, heavy oils, tar and other thick liquids. Has total registering device showing when stock is low in barrel.

No. 97 Pump costs $6.00; Auger, 75 cents; Extension Tube 50 cents a foot.

It's the Cleanest Thing Ever Made

Imagine what it means to the housewife to be shown an economical way to keep everything about the house absolutely pure, sweet and clean. To have no roaches or other vermin around her home.

A few spoonfuls of SULPHO-NAPTHOL, in a pail of water, sprinkled in sinks, closets and cellars, will purify the atmosphere of the entire house, kill disease germs and insure a sanitary condition impossible without it.

Put a case where it can be seen and watch it sell.

DAYTON PROTECTION

for DAYTON USERS

Almost every merchant knows of the efforts of a certain competing scale concern to discredit the honesty and reliability of DAYTON Computing Scales.

In some cities that concern has even gone so far as to seek State and City legislation against DAYTON Scales.

The DAYTON Company, after a legal fight in Omaha, has succeeded in getting a restraining all parties from interfering with DAYTON Scales now in use in that city. Full text of the action and Court's decision sent free upon request.

UNITED STATES INJUNCTION

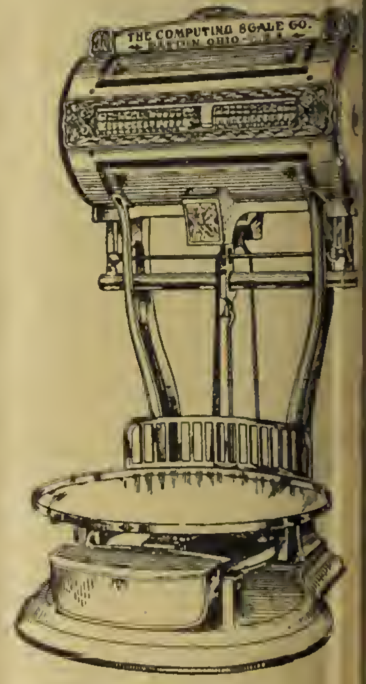
A FIGHT TO THE FINISH.—Every user of DAYTON MONEYWEIGHT Computing Scales can be sure of two things:—

—First, that they are absolutely honest, accurate, reliable, the best and most economical butchers' and grocers' scales ever built;

—Second, that the DAYTON Company will spare no expense to protect their users from the attacks of unscrupulous competitors who find it hard to market their scales in fair and open competition.

Write to-day for descriptive matter of the newest DAYTON Scales, and get our liberal exchange offer.



The new low platform No. 140 DAYTON Scale

Date...

Moneyweight Scale Co., 35 State St., Chicago.

Next time one of your men is around this way, I would be glad to have your No. 140 Scale explained to me.

This does not place me under obligation to purchase.

DO YOU HAVE A Delivery Wagon?
A Telephone?
A Cash Register?

These are secondary considerations nowadays. The essential thing is MODERN FIXTURES—to display and sell goods. You cannot have this without

Walker Bins

A catalog telling all about them will be mailed on request.

Don't Buy a Cheap Wagon

If you do, you'll remember this advice. A cheap wagon looks nearly as well in the factory as our "J. M.," but oh, what a difference in six months!

The "J. M." wagon is the best delivery wagon made. Only the finest materials go into it, and they're put together right, too.

If we haven't what you want, though we probably have, we'll build it for you.

Mr. Grocer:

"It's All in the Shreds"

If you eat Shredded Wheat you will know how good it is; and when you know how good it is you can offer it to your customers with confidence and enthusiasm. If you could see us make Shredded Wheat you would never eat any other cereal. Take a package home with you. For breakfast, heat the biscuit in oven until it is crisp, pour hot milk over it, then add a little cream and a dash of salt. For lunch or dinner try a Shredded Wheat Biscuit with strawberries and cream. In place of white flour bread eat toasted Triscuit, the Shredded Wheat wafer. You will then become a Shredded Wheat "booster"—and when you "boost" Shredded Wheat you are "boosting" yourself.

Shredded Wheat is as staple as granulated sugar. Contains more nutriment than corn or oats and is more easily digested. A steady seller at a good profit. Always Clean. Always Pure. Always Right.

If 1000 Retailers in Philadelphia Recommended Us, Would YOU Believe in Us?

One of the hardest propositions which confront the retailer is to turn their bad debts into cash. Lots of them have tried different collection agencies, paid retaining or subscription fees and got no results; so it is hard to convince them that any one can help to bring the beats to book.

We show you how to collect your own accounts; nobody handles your money but you. We can give you the names of a thousand merchants in Philadelphia whom we have shown how to get money due them which had been charged off long before they heard of us.

It costs you nothing to find out what our plan is—can you afford not to?

Trust's Retail Price of Oil What Competition Made It

Grocers in Different Sections of Same State Often Sold Kerosene and Gasoline at Widely Different Prices. Trust Used Retail Price to Destroy Competition. How Trust Concerns Made Money in One State and Lost It in Another on the Same Oil. Extracts from Another Installment of Bureau of Corporations Report.

Another installment of the exhaustive report prepared by the United States Bureau of Corporations as to the underhand methods of the Oil Trust has been issued during the week. For the first time officially it describes in detail how the Trust, in the retail price of its oil, played one section of the country against another, and often one section of a State against another. The goal always was to destroy competition, and to accomplish this the Trust would go to any length.

From a full copy of the report, the "Grocery World" has extracted a few paragraphs which bear on price discrimination in various sections:—

The prices charged by the Standard Oil Co. for petroleum products in the United States differ widely in different places, according to the degree of competition or monopoly. This is true of all classes of petroleum products, but is most conspicuous and most easily demonstrated with respect to illuminating oil and gasoline.

The methods of marketing oil products lend themselves to this practice of price discrimination. The Standard Oil Co. sells most of its illuminating oil and gasoline in the United States directly to retail dealers at their own towns. They are largely delivered to retail dealers at their own shops by means of tank wagons. The retail dealer is ordinarily not familiar with prices charged in other towns or in central markets, but even if he were he could not take advantage of lower prices prevailing elsewhere to buy oil there and bring it into his own town. The cost of transporting oil in barrels, particularly in less than carload lots, is higher than in tank cars. Moreover, tank-wagon delivery is much more convenient than barrel delivery that the retail dealer is ordinarily unwilling to buy barrel oil even at a lower price.

The Standard Oil Co. has established the system of tank-wagon delivery in the larger towns in all parts of the United States and in a large proportion of the smaller towns in the more populous sections. The business of its competitors is largely confined to a limited area and to a limited number of towns within that area. In towns and sections where there is no competition the Standard can charge monopoly prices, and by reason of the high prices thus obtained it can afford to reduce prices in competitive areas and towns to a point which leaves no profit for the independent concern.

A difference of about seven mills per gallon in the price of illuminating oil may, therefore, mean the difference between a profit of 10 per cent. on the investment in both refining and marketing and no profit at all. The actual differences in price among competitive and non-competitive towns and area, after making allowance for all possible differences in cost of production and marketing, often amount to several cents per gallon. These discriminations in price may mean, thus, the difference between an enormous profit on investment and little or no profit or even a loss. The destructive effect of the practice of price discrimination upon the business of independent concerns is thus obvious.

The best evidence regarding the practice of sectional discrimination is derived from the records of the Waters-Pierce Oil Company (a Standard concern). The evidence is conclusive because these records show not only the differences in prices, but also the differences in profit among the several divisions of the company's territory.

In 1896 the Waters-Pierce Co. lost 1.3 cents per gallon on all oil sold in the St. Louis division, while it made a profit of 2 cents per gallon in the North Texas division. This was a time of severe competition against an independent concern in St. Louis. In the next year, 1897, the company also lost in St. Louis 0.5 cent per gallon, while in the North Texas division it made 3.8 cents. During the first six months of 1904 the profit in the St. Louis division on illuminating oil averaged 0.6 cent per gallon, while in the other divisions it ranged from 1.8 cents to 4.4 cents. The average prices charged by the Standard for illuminating oil in the several States, based on the extensive records of December, 1904, show extraordinarily wide differences, even after the deduction of freight charges. The lowest price appears in Delaware, 7.7 cents per gallon, and the highest in Colorado, 16.2 cents per gallon, or considerably more than twice as high. Part of this great disparity is due to differences in costs, but only part. The cost of marketing in Colorado is about 2¾ cents per gallon, while in Delaware it probably does not exceed 1½ cents, and may be not over 1¼ cents.

The differences in the cost of producing illuminating oil at the different refineries are insignificant. Yet the average State prices in the territory supplied by them show a very wide range. In December, 1904, the average price in Delaware, freight deducted, was 7.7 cents. In Pennsylvania the average was also relatively low, 8.7 cents. On the other hand, in the State of New York, itself containing several Standard refineries, the average price was no less than 10 cents; in North Carolina and also in New Hampshire, 10.3 cents; in part of South Carolina supplied from these seaboard refineries, 11.4 cents; in Florida, 12.8 cents, and in part of Georgia supplied from this source, 13 cents, or 5.3 cents higher than in Delaware.

Perhaps the most striking instance of sectional discrimination which has appeared during recent years is on the Pacific coast. In Southern California there are a number of independent refineries. The Standard carries oil from its great refinery near San Francisco, several hundred miles by water and rail, and sells it in Southern California for much less than the price in San Francisco. The average price, freight deducted, for the southern part of California in December, 1904, was 7.2 cents per gallon, while for the northern part of the State it averaged 12.4 cents per gallon. In Oregon, supplied from the same source, the price averaged 15.3 cents per gallon, and in Washington 15.7 cents; the price in Washington and Oregon was thus more than twice as high as in Southern California for the same oil.

In December, 1904, the price at New York, which is at the very seat of the Standard's greatest refineries, was 10.5 cents per gallon, and at Boston, freight deducted, 10.8 cents per gallon. At Worcester, Mass., a much smaller city, the price was only 7.5 cents. The prices at Cincinnati and Cleveland were still lower, 6.4 cents and 7 cents, respectively. The differences in cost of producing and marketing the oil sold in the cities just mentioned is insignificant. The price at Augusta, Ga., was 8.2 cents, as compared with 10.9 cents at Atlanta, 12.1 cents at Charleston, and 12.5 cents at Jacksonville.

No less striking are the differences in prices charged for illuminating oil and gasoline as among towns in the same vicinity — for example, within the borders of a single State. Here again the most conclusive evidence that differences in price are due to discrimination and not merely to differences in costs is found in the records of the Waters-Pierce Oil Co., which show both the prices in individual towns and the margin of profit above delivered cost. For example, in the East Texas and Louisiana division of the Waters-Pierce Co., in August, 1903, the margin between cost and selling price on Brilliant oil from tank wagon ranged from 1.92 cents to 5.59 cents. In August, 1904, the margin of profit ranged from 0.69 cent to 5.05 cents.

It appears that in 31 of the States and Territories the difference between the highest and lowest price was 3 cents or more, while in Georgia, Missouri, South Dakota, Arkansas, Texas, Idaho, Colorado, New Mexico, Louisiana and California the difference exceeded 5 cents per gallon. In New Mexico there was a difference of no less than 13.2 cents between the highest and lowest price. In most cases very little of these extreme differences in price within a single State can be attributed to differences in marketing cost.

American Flour Making Its Way in Brazil.

The report of the Brazilian Minister of Finance to the President of Brazil shows that the imports of American flour in 1906 were 22.6 per cent. greater than in 1905. American flour is badly handicapped in Brazil, however, through the competition of Argentine flour. The conclusion is that competition by American flour is purely a matter of price. American flours have not merely to compete with the cheaper Argentine article, but also with the Brazilian made, which constitutes the standard for prices. No doubt, on equal conditions American flour would be preferred to Argentine, and, perhaps to national also. The real situation of the Brazilian flour industry appears from the fact that it is owned by foreigners. All the coal for fuel is imported, and all the wheat is imported—in short everything that enters into it operation is imported, and the only thing that sustains it is the excessive duty on flour in comparison with that on wheat. The flour made in Brazilian mills is admittedly of low standard. As to the Argentine flour, the chief foreign competitor in Brazil with the American product, American flour of corresponding grade will go 20 per cent. further in bread making than that of Argentina.

Raisins Now Offered from Australia.

Valencia Fruit Now Brought Here from the Antipodes and Sold at a Price Between California and Spanish Valencias.

A novelty in the American wholesale grocery market this year is raisins from Australia which are this season for the first time brought all the way from the antipodes to be sold in American markets in competition with California and Spanish raisins.

The Australian raisins are of the Valencia variety and surpass the Californias both in size and flavor. They command a price of 9½ cents in a jobbing way. California Valencias command 8½ to 9 cents, but the difference is fully warranted by the difference in quality.

The Australian Valencias also come into direct competition with Spanish Valencias, which sell freely in this country at an average price of 10 cents.

German Meat Retailers Facing Sharp Complaint

Government Investigating Their Prices. Butchers Compelled to Post Their Prices in Their Stores. Consumers Say Retail Meat Prices Have Not Declined Proportionately with Wholesale Prices.

Special correspondence of "Grocery World."

Washington, D. C.,
August 15, 1907.

The German retail dealers of meat are facing and attempting to assuage a widespread complaint among the consumers of that country over the high prices of meat. The situation has become so grave that the Government has taken the matter up and has provided a partial remedy by lowering the tariff on whole carcasses from several adjoining countries. This has reduced the wholesale prices of meat, but for the most part the retail prices have been held up, and this has aroused consumers to great resentment against the retail dealers. A month since the Government issued a request to the authorities of the leading cities to investigate the question, ascertain the causes for the continuance of high prices, and make recommendations as to the best method of bringing about a lowering of rates. Various cities made a careful study of local conditions, and have already taken steps to protect purchasers.

The fact was quickly established that while a few butchers had lowered their prices in conformity with ruling quotations for live stock, most of the trade still maintained the rates of the last winter. For the same grades of a given meat, differences of over 25 per cent. were frequently found in the prices, sometimes when the shops in question were in the same street.

The first column of the following table gives the lowest current meat quotations now prevailing in Germany, those in harmony with present wholesale rates. The second gives the highest current quotations, practically those of general use during the past year and still demanded by many butchers. The third column gives the average rate. Prices are per English pound and for the same quality of meat:—

One result of the campaign has been that certain German cities have adopted the following plan in order to combat the glaring inequalities in rates. Every butcher is now forced to publicly display a placard on which his prices for each sort of meat and for each separate grade of any sort are clearly indicated. Penalties are prescribed for non-compliance.

Postmaster-General Will Work for Parcels Post.

The most significant utterance made by any Government official on the subject of the parcels post was made by Postmaster-General Meyer last Wednesday just after an interview with President Roosevelt. He said:—

> I am going to recommend to Congress in my annual report the establishment of a domestic parcels post service, limited to ten pounds, or any other weight that Congress will accept—five pounds, if necessary.

Says Retailers' Overbuying of Old Teas Is Cause of Decreasing Tea Consumption

Chicago Tea Jobber Who Recently Told "Grocery World" Readers That Tea Consumption Is Decreasing, Now Says It Is Because Retailers Overbuy Through False Idea of Saving Money and Give Their Trade Old, Poor Tea.

A circular recently issued in the United States by a prominent grocer makes references to the price of the new-crop teas and concludes by advising the retail grocer to load up with old tea to protect himself against advanced prices. For the benefit of those who have received such a circular, it is nothing more or less than a ruse, meant to excite buyers into over-stocking on tea.

At the outbreak of the Russo-Japanese war similar circulars were issued with advice to buy freely, which resulted in many merchants over-buying and in some instances supplying their needs for many years. It is a lack of good judgment on the part of an importer, of a jobber, or a retailer, to anticipate too much his wants on tea. Aged tea rapidly deteriorates, and while the merchant thinks he is saving a cent or two, he is over-loading on old teas to save this extra profit, thereby driving a nail into his own coffin.

Boiled down, merchandising resolves itself into a question of supply and demand. If a grocer cultivates the taste of the consumer, and buys tea on an honest grading and cup value, he increases the demand. If a grocer buys old teas or permits himself to become panicstricken through prevarications or misrepresentations on the part of salesmen or jobbers, he is curtailing the demand and keeping in stock the supply. It does not take a wise man to appreciate the importance of this argument, but it is not until you adopt the principle of values, sold at legitimate, fixed profits, that you will reap the harvest.

The tea consumption in the United States is rapidly decreasing. Why? Because frequently we hear the comment, "I cannot get good tea at my grocer's. We like a good cup of tea at our table, but it seems a hopeless task to find the right flavor and quality, consequently we have taken to other beverages." This is a daily story and a quick answer to the many times question of the retail grocer, "What has become of my tea trade?" Let Mr. Merchant buy teas for what they are, not how cheap or what he can save, and then sell them at their true values, not for what he can get, and let Mr. Merchant study the tastes of his customers, sell them teas of a suitable flavor, whether an Oolong, an India-Ceylon, a Japan, a Gunpowder, or a Young Hyson, and he will gradually make many tea friends and eventually enjoy satisfactory and prosperous tea sales.

No matter how many new soaps you thought it necessary to put in, Mr. Retailer, you've noticed that they made no difference in the sale of Babbitt's Best.

There never were so many soaps as there are to-day, and never so much energy spent in selling them, yet Babbitt's Best has to-day the largest sale of its long career!

utter passed through several ands. Each dealer through whose hands the butter passed is eld liable. Many creameries ave been fined within the last ew months, but it is only now hat the Government has begun to et after the dealers.

Handling of butter containing n excessive amount of water, which, as explained, is an adulteration just as much as if the illegal ngredient was oleo, involves the lealer in heavy penalties unless he has taken out a license to sell adulterated butter and actually sells the watered product as adulterated butter, which naturally, not knowing it to be adulterated, he will not have done. All dealers should therefore take pains to exact from their wholesale butter lealer a guarantee of absolute urity. Butter is not sold under a serial number, and a special guarantee is therefore necessary.

The New Ohio Chain Store Scheme.

National Secretary Green, of the National Wholesale Grocers' Association, Roasts the Ohio Wholesaler Who Runs Thirty-five Retail Stores.

Special correspondence of "Grocery World."

Cleveland, Ohio, Aug. 15, 1907.

During my attendance at the recent National Wholesale Grocers' Convention in Chicago I called the attention of the delegates to the fact that a wholesale house had purchased thirty-five retail stores in one of the cities of Ohio, the excuse for doing so being that some other chain-store concern had planned to open up a chain of retail stores.

Naturally the retailers in the city referred to were very much disturbed, and held several meetings to protest against the stand which had been taken by the wholesale house in question.

The consensus of opinion at the close of the meeting was that if each one had attended the meetings when there had been nothing to cause undue excitement conditions would have been very much different than at that time.

How false the excuse was for opening those stores can be realized by reading the following announcement which was put out in their first announcement to the public in regard to their intention:

As cities grow and expand in wealth and population, business conditions change, and the establishing of various branch stores is only abreast of the times, and exactly the same conditions as have occurred in all the large cities of the United States, giving the consumers high-grade goods and good service at the lowest prices. It does not stand to reason that a dealer doing a small business can furnish to consumers groceries on the same advantageous terms as though he were operating a large number of stores whereby his buying power is increased, which he resells at a minimum price.

The reason that this is published at this time is to bring to the minds of the retailers most forcibly the necessity for organizing and attending the meetings of their associations. It has required a great effort to preserve that which rightfully belongs to the retailer; to give to the wholesaler that which rightfully belongs to him, and keep our position intact. There should be some means of preventing any wholesale house going into a proposition of the kind in question, and we believe the National Wholesale Grocers' Association has it in its power to assist the retail trade to the extent that either a firm should retail or should wholesale and not undertake to demoralize the retail trade under the cloak of a wholesale house.

If the above statement had come from the individual retailer, it were bad enough, but coming from a house controlling several wholesale establishments in several towns in the State of Ohio means much more than if it came from an individual.

Our only remedy lies in the organization, in making it as strong as possible, and working together as one man, buying from no wholesale grocer who retails, but distributing our business among those who will protect us in ours.

JOHN A. GREEN,
National Secretary.

More India Tea to the Acre.

Consul-General W. H. Michael, of Calcutta, states that the final figures of the Indian tea crop for 1906-07 show an increase in production of 18,000,000 pounds on an acreage no greater than that of 1905-06. During the season of 1906-07 the United States imported 12,978,431 pounds, as against 14,006,939 pounds during the season of 1905-06.

Goff's special proposition will interest you, as it enables you to make 70 per cent. profit. S. B. Goff & Sons, Camden, N. J., will tell you all about it. Goff's Cough Syrup has been on the market over 35 years.

WE CAN GET YOU ORDERS

We knew when the repeat orders came in from the hotels for Hotel Astor Coffee that we had a blend that would succeed anywhere under all conditions.

Because if a coffee can succeed with the high-grade New York hotels it can succeed anywhere.

We make and sell many brands of coffee, but we're a bit fonder of Hotel Astor than any other. It is truly a delicious blend and there isn't one chance out of a hundred that it won't make the same hit with your trade that it has everywhere else.

We have a special plan getting you orders for Hotel Astor Coffee—may we tell it to you?

Dr. H. W. Wiley, chief of the Federal Bureau of Chemistry and dominant factor in the enforcement of the Federal food law, returned home from Europe last Monday. Simultaneous with his settling himself again in the administrative saddle, the food manufacturers of the country resume their seats on the anxious bench.

Dr. Wiley's Return.

A touching feature of Dr. Wiley's return was the assembling on the dock of a large number of Government employees, who had been trained to make in unison a noise like an imitation lamb chop.

Gimbel Brothers, proprietors of the only good grocery store in Philadelphia, devote half a page in one of last Tuesday's Philadelphia evening papers to an advertisement of their incomparable grocery store, the scare heading for which is "Beware of Short-weight Groceries." Naturally this is good, honest advice, but unfortunately it is turned sour in the mouth by the fact that the Gimbels extract from it the usual lying moral that all other grocery stores give short weight, while they alone do not.

Gimbel Brothers Short Weight Consistency.

Admittedly, short-weight groceries are reprehensible—wholly inexcusable, in fact—but the "Grocery World" sees little ethical difference between them and the short-weight checks which Gimbel Bros. repeatedly send to wholesale grocers and manufacturers from whom they buy groceries. When a concern buys goods on 30 days net, 1 per cent. in 10 days, and neglects to pay until the end of 30 days but still deducts the 10-day discount, the check which it sends in payment is a short-weight check, just as reprehensible and inexcusable as short-weight merchandise.

Alone of practically all news and trade papers of the United States, the "American Grocer" lifts its voice in defense of the Standard Oil Co. The "Grocery World" herewith presents two exhibits which after due reflection it labels "cause and effect":—

STANDARD OIL COMPANY OF NEW YORK, 666 Hudson Street, N.Y.

EFFECT
(Editorial on page 8, American Grocer.)

THE STANDAR. OIL PROSECUTION

The action of the United States Government against the Standard Oil Company has assumed more the appearance of a persecution than a prosecution, seemingly carried forward for political ends. Its conduct reminds us of the rashness of a New York merchant, in criticising some years ago, to one of the oldest and foremost of United States Senators, the sugar tariff, on the ground of its unfairness and injury to the trade. The Senator replied "You are right from the standpoint of a merchant, but it would be —— bad politics."

We have no excuse to offer or palliation to make for any offense the Standard Oil Company may have committed. We must recognize that commercial law is often higher than legislative law and is more likely to fit the conditions of trade and commerce than statutory acts. The Standard Oil Company, the most efficient mercantile and industrial organization that ever existed, has obeyed the unwritten laws of trade and commerce and thereby may have technically violated State and National laws, but that it has committed, intentionally, any offense, that warrants the imposition of a fine exceeding $29,000,000 we do not believe.

The political character of the prosecution is shown by following up the action of Judge Landis with a letter from Commissioner Herbert Knox Smith, claiming that the S. O. Co. is a monopoly, that it has exacted too great a margin between the cost of crude and refined oil, that it has not given the people their full share of the profit derived from by-products, that its claims to efficiency, "is a complete misrepresentation of facts." Everybody knows that not only has the Standard Oil Company given the world the best and most uniform quality of illuminating fluid it has ever known, but it has built up no small share of the commerce of the Nation. Any corporation that carries its transactions to the sixth decimal cannot be accused of a lack of efficiency.

Is the charge of extortion fair, coming as it does from Uncle Sam, charged with unjust tariff exactions and levying tribute beyond all reason from every one of 84,000,000 people? We would that Standard Oil type of efficiency was practiced by the United States Government, for it would teach the people that there is no need for waste, extravagance and unnecessary expenses. How the Standard Oil would clean out the departments and put them on the basis of a first-class mercantile organization! The Post-office department would be self-sustaining, there would be no free seeds from the Agricultural bureau, no junketing excursions from all departments. Efficiency and economy would be enforced and a lesson taught such as all Nations need.

The Standard Oil put a stop to the refining of dangerous oils, at one time so bad that laws were passed by all the States to regulate the grade. It has conferred benefits on the race immeasurable in comparison with its exactions. It even contributed to the election of the administration that is prosecuting and persecuting a corporation that ought to be a source of National pride; and claims that it has not violated the laws as charged and seems in a fair way to prove it. The course of the Government is scarcely in line with "fair play and a square deal." It is a blow at enterprise, skill, the perfection of commercial methods.

The "American Grocer" has always been notorious for sycophancy toward the large corporations, even to the length of repeatedly defending acts which were in gross violation of trade interests. This Standard Oil instance, however, is the limit up to date, particularly that patriotic conception of the Oil Trust putting the United States Government on a clean business basis!

The pure food movement is unquestionably one of the most beneficent reforms since the world began, but aren't we in danger of becoming childish over it? Take the provision regarding the use of sulphur in dried fruits, for example. The rule is that thirty-five one thousandths of 1 per cent. can be used and no more. Think of it—thirty-five one thousandths of 1 per cent. One part in one hundred, or 1 per cent. would be an infinitesimal percentage, but the danger line of sulphur has been set at about one-thirtieth of 1 per cent.

Childishness.

Naturally percentages don't always count. Were the department dealing with prussic acid or some other poison which acts in minute quantities, the case might be different. But sulphur—what boy among us has not been dosed by his mother with sulphur in teaspoonful doses? Admittedly another thing to remember is that the giving of a certain dose of a substance, as a medicine, does not necessarily justify the giving of the same dose in food, but since the harmfulness of sulphur as a food bleach is the criterion, is it conceivable that a substance so beneficial in teaspoon doses could possibly harm when eaten in percentages of far less than 1 per cent., and taken, too, in connection with food only occasionally eaten?

To six physicians and chemists the "Grocery World" has submitted the following query: Could sulphur, used as a bleach with dried fruits and being present therein when eaten to the extent of one-half of 1 per cent., cause harm to the eater? In every case the answer was substantially "Not only would it do no harm, but it would do good."

String beans of fine quality are coming forward from near-by points, and range from 25 to 40 cents.

Two-Minute Sermons for the Retail Grocer

VI.—Using Other People's Ideas.

Use other people's brains as well as your own.

Many business men are to-day calling the heads of their different departments together at regular intervals for a general exchange of ideas, and they request each one to watch for new ideas for each succeeding meeting.

The president of a big corporation makes it a point to have all heads of departments take lunch with him one day each week, and after the meal, with the cigars, he opens the discussion by introducing such ideas as he has picked up during the week, and then asks for the experience of the others along such lines, so as to quickly get at the real value of the ideas. He then encourages each and every one present to do the same. In this way each department manager gets the benefit of the personal experience of all the others on whatever problem is confronting him at the time.

This man goes a notch further with this weekly meeting idea, and has encouraged each department manager to have a short meeeting of all of his assistants each week for the purpose of an exchange of ideas, and each subordinate is asked to watch for every new suggestion coming from the men under his direction and to bring it out at these meetings.

The president of this company says that he has been much surprised because such a large proportion of the time of the meetings of the department heads is taken up by discussions of ideas which were originated amongst the rank and file of the workmen and came to these meetings through the meetings previously held by the subordinates.

When an idea, coming from whatever source, is given a trial the originator is remembered in a way to quicken his brain in the future.

Telegraph Strike Does Not Touch Grocery District as Yet. Campaign Against Bad Eggs. Echoes from State Convention. Derry on Spring Scales. Rumor of a Butter Combine. Small Items of Trade News.

Special correspondence of "Grocery World."

New York, Aug. 16, 1907.

When the telegraph operators stopped work there was some worry in the wholesale grocery district over the prospect that there might be serious interference with wire orders. Even more apprehension was expressed for a few hours because of the talk that the strike would extend to the railroads and so cripple the deliveries of freight. The jobbers say, however, that thus far there has been no serious effect on their business. In some lines orders have been stimulated, retailers having concluded, perhaps, that it would be well to be prepared in case the strike should become more troublesome. The manufacturers noticed a similar effect. Orders still come by wire, as well as mail, the tie-up of the telegraph systems here being only partial, at least as yet. To-day's reports are reassuring.

Two of the wholesale egg merchants are in trouble as a result of the crusade that has recently been begun by the city health authorities to prevent the sale of bad eggs. George E. Cutler, 15 Harrison street, and Louis Schuer, 190 Duane street, were taken yesterday to the Tombs Police Court on the charge of selling bad eggs to retail dealers. Each was held in $500 for examination.

It is said that the Health Board has several inspectors at work examining the quality of eggs sold in various parts of the city and in various lines of trade. Some of the worst of the eggs are sold to confectioners, it is said.

Delegates have returned from the State Convention of the retail grocers, held last week in Elmira, and all report that they were glad they went. It is expected that as a result of the proceedings, the New York State Association of Retail Grocers will soon become a more influential body than it has been in the past. The idea that in other States the grocers are better organized than in New York has sunk quite deep into the minds of those who were at the convention and heard the remarks that were made on this subject. It is recognized that there is a field for organizing the dealers in many parts of the State which have at present no branches of the State society. An equally pressing work is to build up the membership of the branches that now exist. Hundreds of grocers are not enrolled in the cities which have branches. In this city the organization could greatly increase its membership by a little missionary work. Ways and means of doing this are to be devised.

Following is a list of the new officers of the State organization, all of whom are declared to be of the right timber for the responsibilities placed upon them:

President, C. S. Tuttle, of Hornell; first vice-president, Elwood Hanson, of Brooklyn; second vice-president, F. M. Tallman, of Buffalo; third vice-president, I. S. Pugsley, of Peekskill; secretary, Charles Thorpe, of New York; treasurer, C. E. Durgin, of Rochester.

Almost every iniquity being put up to Coney Island it is not surprising to learn that inspectors representing the State Agricultural Department are investigating rumors of the sale and use of oleomargarine in the eating houses and elsewhere on the island. Up to this time there have been no seizures and no arrests. The supposition is that the proprietors of the restaurants buy the stuff from agents representing wholesale dealers.

Parts of the annual report made last January by P. E. Derry, chief of the city's Bureau of Weights and Measures, were lately republished in one or two papers as something new, being erroneously designated as a part of his quarterly report just submitted. Mr. Derry told your correspondent several days ago that while the average condition of the scales in the stores is much better than it was even a year ago, yet the screw springs still give much trouble because it is so easy to change them by loosening or tightening a screw. He finds some spring scales that are accurate when food is placed gently on the platform or holder, but show heavier weight if the article is slapped down suddenly.

Booklets containing a codification of the food laws of the United States and of all the States are being sent out to wholesale grocers from the office of the National Wholesale Grocers' Association in this city. The laws were compiled and codified under the supervision of William C. Breed, the counsel of the association.

Anybody who strolls among the wholesale butter dealers on the West Side these days will hear much excited talk about a combination, if he keeps his ears open. Just what the combination is to be—if it is to be anything—is not yet revealed. It is believed, however, that the so-called Big Five, who had a great deal to do with the control of the New York Mercantile Exchange, contemplate some action to offset the present lack of official quotations on butter. Since the court ordered the organization not to promulgate any more quotations under the old system it has abandoned the plan of quoting prices. This is said to be agreeable to many of the members and the practice of giving secret premiums is curtailed. The question seems to be as to just what the Big Five will do to regain control of affairs. One report is that they will merge the present five separate concerns in one corporation whose unusual resources would then give it many advantages over smaller concerns.

Again the rumor is starting that a combination is sending up the price of the cocoa bean, causing worry among the manufacturers of chocolate.

Frank Dannemann, at 1130 Park avenue, has sold his retail grocery to Mr. Fahrenhorst, formerly manager of the Gramercy Market, Woodmere, L. I.

Henry Bruning, a retail grocer of St. Mark's and Utica avenue Brooklyn, is erecting a handsome addition to his building, with dwelling apartments for four families; addition to cost $22,000.

State of North Carolina Back of Prosecution Against Diamond Match Co.

Match Trust Salesman Arrested, Charged with Violating Trust Laws of North Carolina. The Trust's Selling Contract at the Bottom of the Case.

What may be the inaugural of a prosecution by the United States Government against the Diamond Match Co. similar to those recently begun against other monopolies was begun last week in North Carolina, when one Walter Buoy, a salesman for the Match Trust, was arrested on the charge of violating the anti-trust laws of North Carolina.

The affidavit on which the arrest was made was sworn to by Albert Peschan, another traveling salesman, and the case will be prosecuted by the official law officers of the State.

The affidavit sets forth that the Diamond Match Co. recently through Mr. Buoy, sold to the J. C. Stevenson Co., wholesale grocers of Charlotte, N. C., a large quantity of frictionless matches made or controlled by the Diamond Match Co., and required of the purchaser, the Stevenson Co., an agreement that they would not handle any other brand or manufacture of matches, which is alleged to be in violation of Chapter 218 of the Public Laws of North Carolina, known as the anti-trust law. The Trust's salesman gave $1,000 bond as surety for his appearance.

How Some Manufacturers Treat the Retail Trade

Philadelphia Retailer Inserts Unsolicited Advertisement for Huyler's Cocoa and Chocolate in His Store Paper and Sells Twenty Cases Through It. Asks Huyler to Allow Him Five Dollars for It and Huyler Never Even Answers His Letter.

The enterprising and intelligent way in which some manufacturers treat retail grocers, upon whom, be it emphasized, they are dependent for the distribution of their products, is shown by an instance which came under the eye of the "Grocery World" during the week.

One of the largest retail grocers in Philadelphia issues a weekly store paper, consisting of four pages, very carefully and attractively prepared—not a circular, but a real publication of considerable importance. Of this 10,000 copies are printed, each being sealed in an envelope and delivered to a consumer from a selected list.

In a recent issue this grocer published the following three advertisements for the Huyler Chocolate Co.:—

HUYLER'S
BAKING CHOCOLATE.

Hasn't an equal for smoothness, quality or flavor, either on this side of the Atlantic or the other, for that matter. To have you learn of its superior quality, we cut the price for the first, last and only time. Don't miss it. Regularly, 20c. the half-pound cake.

'Till Easter, 14c. the cake.

HUYLER'S
INIMITABLE COCOA.

That's Huyler's Cocoa described in a phrase—and the simile is not far fetched. Those who once taste Huyler's Cocoa never can be satisfied with any other brand. At this price, the sale is limited to four cans to a purchaser. None sold to dealers. Regularly, 14c. a ¼-lb. can.

'Till Easter, 11c. the ¼-lb. can.

HUYLER'S
VANILLA CHOCOLATE

Is a very superior article, so much so that all other chocolates seem flat and tasteless by comparison. Children prefer it to candy, and it may be eaten at any time in any quantity without ill after effects. Regularly, 10c. ¼-lb. cake.

'Till Easter, 8c. the cake.

This advertisement was not bought by the Huyler people, neither, to be sure, was it inserted by their authority; nevertheless through it twenty cases of Huyler's chocolate and cocoa were disposed of. These results were so extremely good that the retailer wrote to Huyler, told him of the advertisement and its results and asked whether he didn't think it would be decent to allow him $5 for the space which had been given Huyler's goods in his store paper.

Now, whether Huyler thought it good or bad business to pay the retailer $5 for an advertisement which had sold twenty cases of goods was quite his own affair. To the unbiased outsider a man who refused would look like a fool; nevertheless it was a personal matter with Huyler, and nobody could have justly complained if he had decided against it.

But Huyler never even answered the retailer's letter!

Since that day not a pound of the Huyler goods has been sold over the counters of the store, and none ever will be sold.

To Push Currants in New Ways.

E. Bowron, a member of the large London grocery house of Jos. Travers & Son, and a director of the Privileged Currant Co., of Greece, is in the United States for the purpose of extending the consumption of currants through a campaign of advertising and of employing all possible means of popularizing that fruit in this country. The Privileged Co., which was chartered two years ago by a special act of the Greek Parliament, after various other plans had been tried to prevent the demoralization of one of the chief industries of the country through overproduction and the accompanying excessive competition has a monopoly of the currant business in Greece. It immediately set to work on receiving its authority from the Government to rehabilitate the industry and place it on a profitable basis. In this it has been fairly successful. Mr. Bowron's plan of advertising currants directly to the consumer has been tried in England, with the result that the consumption in that country has been considerably increased.

enthusiastic users bear out our claim that the American Slicing Machine is the best money-saver, labor-saver and trade-bringer ever devised.

It will bring you all the sliced meat trade of your locality.

It will make you a better profit on each sale.

It is a slicing machine, not a toy.

It cuts any kind of boneless meat—ham, bacon, roast beef, dried beef, etc.—in any one of sixteen different thicknesses from 1-48 inch up.

It saves all waste.

It enables you to get 20 per cent. more slices from a given weight of meat than by hand-cutting.

Any boy can do the work of four hand slicers.

Do You Know Why the Department Stores Do So Much Business?

It's because they attract people to their stores. The most effective method of doing this is by attractively decorated windows, made bright as day by electricity. Grocers take a leaf from the Department Store's book—dress your windows invitingly; put signs in them calling attention to bargains and light the displays so that passers-by can't help seeing them. You will bring enough new customers into your store in a day to pay the cost for a month.

While your store is closed and you are off duty, make your windows win new trade for you—a representative will call and show you how it can be done and what it will cost if you will drop a card or phone.

Window-Dressing Articles Wanted

For several months the "Grocery World" has been looking for the right man to take charge of its "Window-Dressing Department" and contribute a good, suggestive weekly article. We have tried several, but none was exactly what was wanted.

We will now attempt to get these articles from our subscribers, probably every one of whom has some technical knowledge of window-dressing. What we want is articles clearly describing window displays that can be made by the average retailer; not necessarily new or original—in fact, those which have been used successfully are perhaps preferable to all others.

For all acceptable articles, the "Grocery World" will pay an average price of $5 each. All matter sent in under this arrangement should be addressed to the "Window-Dressing Department." If drawings are also sent they should be made throughout in black ink (not pencil).

THE GROCERY MARKETS

Tea.

The tea market has taken a sort of brace during the week and nearly all lines are now firm and active. There has been an excellent demand during the week and lowest grades of Young Hysons, Hysons, Formosa Oolongs, Foochow Oolongs, Pingsuey Gunpowders all show about 1 cent advance. The cause is the fact that stocks are so small and the market in the East is higher.

Coffee.

The past week has brought no changes whatever in the Rio and Santos coffee market. The situation remains dull, with a weak undertone, although prices have been fairly steady. Mild grades are steady to firm and in moderate demand. Java and Mocha are firm and unchanged.

Sugar.

There has been no change in the sugar market during the past week. Raws are about steady. Refined sugar is unchanged and in fair demand. The great scarcity of peaches has cut down the August sugar demand very materially. No change in refined sugar is in sight.

Syrup and Molasses.

The market for all grades of syrup and molasses is very quiet and will show no special activity until cooler weather. Glucose is unchanged. Compound syrup is dull at ruling prices. Sugar syrup is wanted for export at the same prices ruling for some time. Molasses is unchanged and dull.

Fish.

Mackerel is wanted. Some new summer Norways are coming forward and selling at comparatively low prices, owing to the fact that the quality is not what it will be later. As the quality improves the price will advance. Another factor in the present low price is the comparatively large receipts. Irish mackerel are unchanged and in moderate request. Shore mackerel are scarce and high. Cod, hake and haddock are exceedingly dull on spot, although some business is doing for future delivery. Prices are unchanged throughout. New prices on sockeye and red Alaska salmon have not yet been named, but will be within a short time. The sockeye prices will be forthcoming first. On both grades the price will probably be somewhat higher than a year ago, owing to general firmness of the salmon market. The pack of red Alaska is expected to be particularly short. There has been no change in sardines during the week, either foreign or domestic, but the Maine packers announced an advance of 10 cents in quarter oils to take place August 24th. This was to give buyers a chance to get in at the old price, which some few are doing. The demand for domestic sardines is good.

Canned Goods.

Spot tomatoes are dull. As to price, the market is about unchanged. Old Jerseys are quoted at 90 cents delivered and old Southern goods 85 to 87½ cents. There have been rumors of actual sales of futures as low as 80 cents and it is known that new 2s have sold as low as 60 cents. The undertone of the market is weak and the crop outlook heavy. If nothing interferes the chance is that tomatoes will decline. Corn is dead in Philadelphia, but in fair emand outside. The pack prospects for all sections but Maine seem to be poor. Maine packers are much encouraged. Prices are unchanged. Peas are closely cleaned up. New York packers are delivering all sorts of ways and promise from 60 to 75 per cent. of delivery. Wisconsin will also be short, and packers offer only 10 per cent. on some grades. There is a general scarcity of lower grades. Peaches are growing in worse condition, and there are practically no quotations on the canned article at all. Seconds yellows have sold in Baltimore during the week at $1.75, against a normal price of 85 cents to $1. Apples have advanced again, owing to bad crop prospects, and New York State gallons are now quoted strong at $2. No change has occurred throughout the California line, and small Baltimore canned goods show no special change either.

Dried Fruits.

There is very little doing in prunes. Reports of heavy drop still come from the coast, and many holders expect an advance on the strength of it. There is no demand at present, and no advance will occur until the business comes. Prices are therefore unchanged, both on spot and futures. Peaches are unchanged and seem likely to be scarce this season, since considerable sulphur is used in their bleaching and the trade is uneasy about taking them. Since growers, who use the sulphur are also uneasy, they have increased their sales of fresh peaches to canners, rather than to evaporators, thus avoiding the sulphur problem absolutely. Apricots are unimproved and very dull. Currants are in fair demand and unchanged in price. Raisins show no change for the week. The spot stock is still very small.

Provisions.

The market for all grades of smoked meats is unchanged. The consumptive demand is very good, but the supply is equal to the demand, and the market is only steady at prevailing prices. Pure lard is unchanged and stocks are satisfactorily cleaning up. Compound lard is firm and unchanged and is selling within ¼ cent per pound of pure. No change in either grade seems likely within the next week. Barrel pork is unchanged and prices firm. Dried beef and canned meats are in active demand at unchanged prices. Outside of a small speculative movement, prices have been stationary.

Beans and Peas.

Pea beans are unchanged so far as the Michigan variety is concerned, but New York State quotations are about 10 cents higher, due to light supply. The demand is fair. Marrows are 5 to 10 cents lower; demand light. California limas show no change and a light demand. Split peas are active and unchanged in price. Green and Scotch peas are still firm and scarce.

Butter.

The butter market is active, both by way of consumptive and speculative demand. The receipts are normal and the quality good for the season. The present receipts of butter are fully up to a year ago, while the price is 10 to 15 per cent. higher. No change seems likely in the near future, but if any comes it will probably be a slight decline. The make of near-by butter is short, and the bulk of the trade is being supplied from the West.

Eggs.

The egg market has advanced 1 cent per dozen, due to extreme scarcity of new-laid eggs. The market is not yet high enough to bring out fancy eggs from cold storage, and conditions will therefore be firm until further advances come. The weather has grown somewhat cooler during the week and the current receipts are showing less effects of the heat. The present outlook is for a firm market and possibly unchanged prices for the next few days.

Cheese.

The cheese market remains unchanged so far as the city markets are concerned, but the country markets have advanced ⅛ to ¼ cent which will probably be communicated to the secondary markets within a week or so. The consumptive demand for cheese is very good and is absorbing the receipts as fast as they arrive. We will have a speculative demand as soon as September comes, after which there may be a sharp advance. Stocks of cheese in storage are lower than a year ago.

Produce.

Cabbage, 10 cents per basket, demand poor; savoy, 50 cents per

Hams That Always Sell

There is another sort of ham much less preferred to the absolutely unidentified and unbranded ham, and that is the ham of the packer who gets good raw material to-day and poor to-morrow.

Both of these kill the grocers' trade, because they are so irregular. They please his customers to-day and provoke them to-morrow. No trade can last long under hot and cold applications.

MARKET NOTES.

Some peas are in market from New York State. They command $1.50 per bushel, and the quality is good. They seem to be selling as fast as received.

Peaches grow scarcer and scarcer. Jersey peaches range from $2 to $2.50 per basket, and Delawares $1.50 to $2.50. A few Georgias in cold storage range from $3.50 to $4. While prices may drop somewhat from the above level, there is a strong chance that they may not drop much.

Near-by blackberries and huckleberries are both coming along yet, but the season is winding up. Both range from 10 to 12 cents per quart and are selling well.

Near-by tomatoes are still coming heavily, and canners are buying at 25 to 28 cents per basket. The finest second earlies bring 75 cents. The quality of the first early fruit is poor. There is still no change in the prospect of a large crop.

Watermelons are coming from North Carolina and Georgia, and range from 15 to 30 cents. The quality is good.

Lima beans are coming both from near-by points and North Carolina, and average $1.25. The quality is only fair.

To Fight Middlemen.

The American Society of Equity, which is designed to do away with all middlemen, is reported as making progress in various parts of the country, according to the "Union Labor Advocate." Farmers and labor union men of Scranton, Pa., recently got together and formed an Equity Producers' and Consumers' Exchange. It is said that the new exchange is meeting with encouraging success. The amount of stock first issued was for $25,000 which has been more than subscribed for. Thus encouraged at the outset, the exchange intends to issue another block of stock for a similar amount. Half of the stock already issued was set aside for the laboring people of Scranton and half for the farmers. In each case there was a demand for more than the allotment. The promoters say that orders for the supply of several thousands quarts of milk to be delivered daily have been already received. The exchange will conduct its business on a cash basis. The object of the society or organization is to sell directly to the consumer such articles as garden and farm produce, eggs, milk, butter and so on.

Useful Facts About Groceries

The department which will henceforth be conducted under the above head is best explained by the letter which appears below, and which was recently sent to the "Grocery World." In the hope that a little such matter may be of interest and value to "Grocery World" readers, a short educational article along the lines indicated will appear under this head from time to time.

Vermontville, N. Y.

Editor "Grocery World."

Dear Sir:—I have long wanted a book which would be a sort of encyclopædia, one that would take a certain article, describe it, tell where it grew, how it was prepared for market, what season of the year it was marketed, how it should be stored, whether in a cold or warm place.

Such a book was published once, but as near as I can find out it is out of print now.

I was thinking if the "Grocery World" could devote, say, half a column a week to a work of this kind we would have, in a little while, the long-looked-for work.

But I won't ask for too much, for we are getting good things all the time.

Very truly yours, N. H. Breckenridge.

Gruyere Cheese.

A popular kind of continental cheese often made from skimmed or partially skimmed cows' milk in the Jura regions of both Switzerland and France, and also in several parts of the Vosges Mountains.

The original, and perhaps the best, is the Swiss, and took its name from Gruyère, a bailiwick in the Canton of Fribourg, Switzerland, where it is made from a mixture of goats' and ewes' milk. Ordinary composition: Water, 34.68; casein and albumen, 31.41; fat, 28.93; milk sugar, 1.13; and ash, 3.85.

The curd is pressed in large and comparatively shallow cylindrical molds, and while in the mold is heavily salted during a month or more, also strongly flavored with a dried and powdered herb, Melatitus officinalis.

Gruyère cheese is an intermediate between the hard and soft cheeses, but is quite firm and dry and of a pale yellowish color. It is notably traversed by numerous cavities, air bubbles, or cells and passages, and is one of the kinds most often used in cooking macaroni and certain other continental dishes.

The French Gruyère contains more numerous but smaller holes in it, and its production in the three departments (Jura, Doubs and Aix) on the confines of Switzerland increases yearly, and supplies over three-quarters of the cheese made in France; but in Switzerland it remains stationary although the industry there dates back to 1636 at least.

A woman doesn't buy goods when she simply gives an order to the fellow that calls in the morning.

The new Lehman price on Table Butter, 26c. lb.

That doesn't call for any thought or any figuring. Anybody can do it. There's no interest attached to it. There's no fun in it and there's no money in it.

Finest Cheese, 16c.
XXXX Flour, 65c.

The fact is, if you have the ready money and the knack of buying you can easily save the family 50 dollars a year at Lehman's. There isn't any question about this at all.

Our own Condensed Milk, 9c. Knox Gelatine, 10c.

If you don't do it, it's because you don't try. By getting things charged and by not looking after prices and comparing one thing with another you're out just this amount of money.

Cream of Wheat, 12c. Egg-O-See, 7c.

Both of you talk it over.

If what we write is right, then it's worth trying. If what we write is wrong and you find it so, then the experience would be worth something and in future you would treat our advertising with indifference.

Cox Gelatine, 9c. Pot Roast, 8c.

So "the knack of buying" is to own your goods right. It's to buy for cash above all things, and allow us to be your Grocer. That's the plain English of it. That's the way to put it to get results for both parties.

Picnic Hams, 9¾c. Salt Pork, 12½c.

Mr. Sweeney at the upper store, Mr. Barlow at the lower store,, or Mr. Fox at Chambersburg will be pleased to go into further details with you any day.

Tenderloin Roast, 12c. Fresh Scrapple, 5c.

We would like to call your attention to a new Formosa Oolong Tea that we have just received.

The District of Formosa in China is where the flowery Garden Tea comes from, and this of ours is a real Formosa.

The "trading stamp" price on this Tea is 60c. or 70c., but as we sell only goods and base our prices upon a fair profit and being large spot cash Tea Dealers, we have put this

FLOWERY FORMOSA OOLONG ON SALE AT 35c POUND

Glad to sell you a ¼ lb. for proof's sake.

All "Quality Fish."		Rye Bread.....5c.

This is a very cleverly written advertisement, but there seems to be one thing lacking in it, or one inconsistency, I can't tell which. If Lehman & Co. send out for orders and charge goods, then it is not good business to talk up their cash business as against their credit methods. If, on the contrary, they do not sell on credit, but do a cash business solely, they ought to say so, for nobody who doesn't already know can tell from this advertisement. They may be able to infer from certain expressions used, but they should not be left to infer. Without this, the Lehman argument is incomplete. In substance it ought to be this: "The woman who simply gives orders is not really buying at all, especially if she has her goods charged. The way to really buy, and buy right, is to come to this store, see what you're buying and pay cash for it. We do not charge goods and it's a good thing for you that we don't, for it brings

This statement gives what I understand to be the whole story. Any one reading the advertisement I reproduce might easily be led to suppose that the Lehman stores had two departments— a cash and a credit department.

Aside from this the advertisement is very cleverly put together, and if the entire campaign is as good I have no doubt it will bring very satisfactory results.

Government Will Find Out How Little Sulphur Can Be Used in Dried Fruit.

R. A. Gould, chief chemist of the Department of Agriculture on the Pacific coast, is conducting an examination into the use of sulphur in drying fruit. It is the purpose of the department to watch the fruit through the packing houses and into the market. Mr. Gould will have three crews in the field, one at Yuba City, another at Fresno, and the third at Suisun. Two trained chemists will be in charge of the experiments in each of these locations, and will make tests in the field to determine the smallest amount of sulphur which will preserve the dried fruit until it reaches the consumer. These crews are from the laboratory in San Francisco and are operating on a commercial scale on from half a ton to ten tons of fruit. The fruit thus treated will go into the market alongside that of the growers treated in the same apparatus. It will be purchased by the department and analyzed in one of the Eastern laboratories.

Heart-to-Heart Talks With Grocery Clerks

"Mutual Aid Sheets" Which a Large Eastern Retail Grocer Tucks in Each Clerk's Weekly Pay Envelope. Some Advice From the Head of the House on Selling Goods and Other Subjects.

[The "Grocery World" has come into possession of a series of "Mutual Aid Sheets," which are weekly little talks issued regularly to its clerks by one of the large retail grocery stores of the East. The talks are typewritten and a copy is enclosed in each clerk's pay envelope. They are so soundly practical and so useful generally that it is this journal's purpose to publish them weekly or bi-weekly for the edification of other clerks as well as other grocers who have clerks.—ED.]

We're going to make Saturday a record breaker on the vegetable stand. Everything points that way.

You'll get a list Friday and every one of you must take hold and sell from that list. The vegetable men on the outside stand believe the record day is Saturday. So do we. Tomatoes will be cheap. Potatoes will be cheap. Corn will be down. Get the prices "off by heart." The show will be a picture and the picture will be completed at 6 in the morning.

CHILDREN CUSTOMERS.

Give them your best attention and they'll come again.

"That's an awful nice man that waits on me, Mamma."

Mamma likes that. If you cannot possibly make out their little mutterings write a few words to that effect and put the note in an envelope.

The cashier will drop the change in a pay envelope.

That's one of the "little things" that counts.

Treat them with deference. Their money is small, but the little tongue can be made a good advertising medium.

AVOID DISPUTES.

If a can of salmon is returned cut open and it looks good to you and "rotten" to her keep your opinion to yourself. Pass it over to the floorwalker.

Above all things avoid arguing. Her mind is made up and that settles it. Trying to have your own way under such circumstances makes matters a hundred times worse.

Ten to one she's honest about it and ten to one she'll be thanked for bringing it back.

That's one way of holding "good trade."

NEW YORK

New York is the greatest food distributing point in the world. It is the most unique, comprehensive and interesting world's fair ever held. Here is represented all arts and industries, classified, yet diversified, challenging attention. For a display of jewel rarities in the art world visit the marble palace of Tiffany & Co., on Fifth avenue. If interested in fine retail grocery stores you will find them here, as well as other wonderful business establishments. The great hotels, Waldorf, Astor, St. Regis, Belmont, Imperial and others equally as attractive, are all well worth a visit. For up-to-date furniture visit the store of Flint & Co., and if in search of an antique clock or bedstead, or a rare old desk is wanted for your library, you will find these in the old shops scattered along Fourth avenue. Vantine's on Broadway is also an interesting establishment, and what is true of the above statement is but expressive of what may be found in any other line.

THE WORLD

"New York is to the United States what London is to the British Empire."

The Hon. James Bryce, Ambassador from England, said only a short time ago, "No one can visit New York without being struck by the progress which has been made. There is not in the whole world any gate through which so much commerce passes in and out. There is no port through which so many articles enter from every part of the world."

SEVEN BILLION DOLLARS

New York is the power house of America. Its assessed valuation is nearly seven billion dollars; to be exact, $6,305,794,185. It has more than 300 miles of water frontage. Contains more Irish than Dublin and more Italians than Rome, and more Germans than any two cities in Germany combined outside of Berlin. To enter into the details that make up New York's commercial greatness is not here practicable. Suffice it to say that in the variety of foreign products and the extent of domestic manufactures, New York leads all other American cities.

Write for copy of our spice booklet.

300 MILES OF WATER FRONT

The most enjoyable time to visit the metropolis is during the month of September. The climate is then invigorating and business life at its height. An evening at Manhattan Beach from now on is delightful. The music, as well as the pyrotechnic display and sights, most entertaining. A trip encircling the island of Manhattan brings to view 300 or more miles of water front and makes this ideal sail of three hours most interesting. Our display of Premier food products is also a sight worth seeing, as well as our King street manufacturing plant, which interests people.

FRANCIS H. LEGGETT & COMPANY

"It pays to buy in New York" is an old saying, but true, because no food display at a special food exhibit ever approached in variety, extent or novelty that which is constantly made in scores of wholesale and retail stores throughout Greater New York (population over 4,000,000). The reasons for New York's great predominance are numerous. It is the focal point of commerce, manufacturing and distributing. Here steamship lines converge to a greater degree than in any other port on the face of the globe. Here come steamships from Liverpool, Hamburg, the ports of the North Sea, the Baltic, the Mediterranean, from Calcutta, Bombay, Australia, South America and the great ports of the Pacific, and here likewise come the products of the vast factories in all parts of the country and from millions of square miles of American farms to seek shipment to the ports whence come the varied foreign products that the American people buy and use. It is concentration of this kind that makes a commercial centre. More than 75 per cent. of all the United States imports from foreign countries passes through the port of New York, and practically all the articles thus brought here are sold as merchandise by the business houses of the metropolis. This is one reason why you can buy teas, coffees, spices, olives, sardines, and a thousand other articles, not only groceries, but everything else, to better advantage here than in any other market. We have seven specials in Olives at special prices. Send for special list.

Spoiling Good Home Merchants.

A rather funny coincidence happened the other day.

You know it's always been an idea of mine that a great lot of small merchants, instead of taking their sons and daughters into their own business, think they're fit for something better, and mistakenly send them to business college to be turned out second-grade stenographers or bookkeepers.

I was in a wholesale house, talking with the manager of sales, a friend of mine.

He was looking over some letters that had just been run off on the typewriter and handed to him to sign.

"Drat that girl!" he said in great irritation as he picked up a pen and made a lot of corrections in a letter—a little short letter, too. "By George, these stenographers pay no more attention to the sense of a letter than they do to the weather on the moon! Just so a word looks like something they'll write it in that way, no matter whether it makes sense or not. Miss ———."

The girl came—she had vicious red hair—and took the letter away and corrected it. I remembered her name because it was unusual.

"Why do you keep a girl that you have to roast this way?" I asked.

"Keep her!" he said, "keep her! What good would it do to fire her when we couldn't get any better! We got her right out of a business college and thought she'd surely know a little!"

A week after that I visited the retail store of a grocer I know up in Alleghany, Pa. He went on to me about how hard it was to get good help.

"What's the matter with your children?" I asked. I knew he had several.

"Well, the only one old enough to help any is ———," he said. "She could have been cashier, and I would have been willing to pay her good wages, but no, she must go to Philadelphia to a business college. I thought she might have stayed here, but her mother thought I was standing in her light, so I let her go. She got through and got a good job right away. She's stenographer in ——— & ——— (the very jobbing house where I had seen the red-headed girl who the sales manager said was no good.)

"By gad!" I said, "I believe I've seen her there. Has she got auburn hair?" (Ain't I the slick diplomat?)

"That's her, all right," said the grocer.

In this case the father had a right to insist that his girl stay home and take an interest in his business. The chance is she'd have made a good cashier, because she would have naturally had an interest in her own father's business. She had no interest in her city job and partly for that reason was no good in it.

The chance is that a good cashier was plumb spoiled to make a rotten stenographer.

Just for the false glamour of working in the city!

I have a friend who runs a Philadelphia business college—quite a student of human nature, and as his place is pretty successful he has lots of chances to see it. He told me something only a few months ago that made me all the more firm in the opinion that a grocer ought to use his children himself if he can, rather than ambitiously send them off to business college to make half-cut office people.

Don't forget that if a boy or a girl has any business capacity at all it'll come out a lot quicker if you put 'em in a business in which they have a real interest, like their father's.

But about the business college man. He got to talking with me one day about the business college business.

"I'm really taking money for nothing," he said. "A lot of these students will never make anything out of this course. They're not cut out for it—it isn't their line. For instance, I booked a new student to-day. He's a great big thick-fingered German boy—father keeps a delicatessen store in ———. He wanted to study stenography and that's what he's started in to do. He'll never make a decent shorthand writer if he works a hundred years. Neither his hands nor his brain are quick enough. He'd much better have stayed home and gone into his father's store, for that sort of thing is what he's best fitted for. I've got a lot more of the same kind. They come down here from the country towns, children of the business men up there, all of 'em dazzled by the idea of a job in the city. They manage to push through the course and graduate—though some of 'em don't even do that—but when they go out to take a real job they fall down fearfully. I can't help it—I've done all I can."

I think there's such a lot in that.

Very often it's the mistaken ambition of the father or mother. Their business is good enough for them, but not good enough for their boy or girl. Not on your life—they must go to business college and get a fine job in the city where they can rise in the world!

Well, the city's the place to rise all right, if you have anything to climb with. But very often the climbers haven't—they could have climbed much more easily into importance in their father's stores.

Question: * * *, Pa.—I inclose a license issued by this borough, on the back of which is printed the ordinance authorizing the same. This ordinance was passed at the request of some produce dealers to exclude outside hucksters, but, as you will observe, the borough Council passed a sweeping ordinance including all grocers who solicit orders through the town. As the wording of this ordinance is similar to the Altoona ordinance referred to in the last issue of the "Grocery World," I would like to inquire whether this ordinance is not also illegal?

Answer.—The ordinance referred to is as follows:—

Be it ordained by the Burgess and Town Council of the Borough of Phœnixville:

I. That it shall be unlawful for any person to sell or offer for sale at retail upon the streets of the borough, or from house to house, for the sale of any goods, wares or merchandise of any kind, or of any meat, fish, groceries, provisions or foods of any kind, except milk, without first obtaining a license or permit for such purpose from the Burgess.

II. The Burgess is hereby authorized to issue a license or permit for the purposes aforesaid to any applicant of good character, upon the payment of fifteen dollars ($15.00), which said license or permit shall remain in force for the term of one year, or one dollar per day for each person so engaged if paid daily.

III. The said license or permit shall contain the name, address and occupation of the licensee and shall not be transferable.

IV. This ordinance shall not apply to a person selling the produce of his own farm.

V. Any person or persons violating the provisions of this ordinance shall, upon conviction before the Burgess, forfeit and pay a fine of not less than ten dollars ($10.00) nor more than thirty dollars ($30.00) and the costs of suit, for each offense; and in default of payment of such fine and costs shall be imprisoned in the borough lockup for a period not exceeding forty-eight hours.

VI. All ordinances or parts of ordinances inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed.

The only way the Altoona peddling ordinance was declared unconstitutional was when it attempted to interfere with interstate commerce. Where peddling is sought to be done by some person within the State of Pennsylvania, who does not bring goods from outside the State, the Altoona ordinance and the ordinance this correspondent sends are both constitutional. But both are unconstitutional if sought to be enforced against peddlers of goods which come into the State in original packages. That, as explained, is because goods of that character are a part of interstate commerce, and no local ordinance has any power to interfere with that.

What the Sulphur Ruling Means to California Fruit Men.

A. L. Hobbs, of Fresno, who has been conducting a series of experiments on the subject of sulphuring green fruits of California, has at last arrived at something like a definite result. F. E. Twining, the chemist, employed to make the analysis, has found that not more than a pound and a quarter of sulphur to a ton of green fruit can be used if the amount of sulphurous acid resulting is to be within the prescribed limit. The amount of sulphuring used in previous years has been about five to ten pounds to the ton. Dr. Sherman, of the Minnewawa, made a test with peaches in the bleaching, of which one-half a pound of sulphur had been used to 400 pounds of fruit. The percentage of sulphurous acid was 86-1,000. Another experiment made with fruit furnished by F. Peterson showed 60-1,000 per cent. of sulphurous acid in peaches which had had three pounds of sulphur to 2,600 pounds of fruit, and had been under the sulphuring process for three hours. Nectarines from the same grower, treated in precisely the same manner, showed 41-1,000 percentage. Extensive experiments with samples of the fruit being sulphured for the market by various growers in the county, after the usual method, have revealed the fact that the average amount of sulphurous acid contained in peaches, selected promiscuously, is about 114-1,000 per cent., and in some cases averaging as low as 110-1,000 per cent. These results look very discouraging in the opinion of those conducting the tests, and Mr. Hobbs even says it will prove a practical impossibility to sulphur the peach crop within the 35-1,000 limit.

Nordlinger on Coffee.

New York, August 16, 1907.
Editor "Grocery World."

Dear Sir:—Our last report was dated on the 15th ultimo. Since then the price for No. 7 coffee advanced in Santos 550 reis per 10 kilos (equal to about 20 per cent.) At this advance the planter obtains a paying price for his product.

We have of late repeatedly referred to the effect the low milreis price may have on the movement of the crop. As a matter of fact, the receipts were small while the price was low, and due to the enhanced values ruling of late we expect the movement to ports soon to assume normal proportions compared to the size of the crop. The receipts may reach this month double the quantity that was received last month.

With the increase in the receipts, we naturally look for freer offerings from Brazil, and in consequence some lowering of values.

With reference to the current crop, estimates do not differ quite as much as a month or two ago. Those previously estimating it at 10,000,000 bags have raised their ideas to 11,000,000 bags, and one of our correspondents who was speaking of 16,000,000, has reduced his estimate to 15,000,000. If we strike the medium of 13,000,000 bags, including the quantity carried over, we may not go far wrong. But the size of the current crop will soon have lost its effect on market values, and the prospects for the coming crop will take its place as the dominating feature.

The prospects for the next crop will be based primarily on the climatic conditions during the next four weeks, on the extent and character of the September flowering, and on the weather conditions during and after the flowering period. A conservative course would seem advisable during that time, and until the critical period has been passed, always bearing in mind that spot supplies are under strong control, and it stands to reason that anything of a strongly detrimental nature to the future prospects would be availed of by the holders of the actual stuff to force prices materially higher.

Mild coffees are coming in sparingly both in Europe and the United States. Nevertheless, we believe the receipts during the next four months will compare favorably with those of last year when they were exceptionally small, despite the fact that the Java crop is virtually a failure. Reports received by us from several Central American States are to the effect that the prospects for their next crop are poor. A falling off of at least one-third from last year's production is expected. Some speak of a reduction of one-half. This augurs well for an improvement in the price during the rest of the year. The stock here of desirable qualities is extremely light, consisting of a few parcels of Bogotas and Mexicans, which will be absorbed quickly, when the usual fall demand sets in.

Fresh supplies are on the way from Columbia, San Salvador and Venezuela, but only in moderate quantities.

Yours truly,
HENRY NORDLINGER & CO.

Editor "Grocery World."

Dear Sir:—As you are in touch through your journal, the "Grocery World," with the trade in general, I would ask you to please advise me of any openings you may know of or learn of for a traveling man. Some specialties I would prefer rather than a general line. I have had a good deal of experience in the grocery line. Thanking you for your kind attention.

Yours truly, F.

Practical Advice Wanted.

Hamilton, Ont., Aug. 8, 1907.
Editor "Grocery World."

Dear Sir:—Do you know of some firm in New York that gives practical illustrations and descriptions of all the latest methods of introducing and selling goods? You join and pay so much and they send you a description, complete, of the newest ways to advertise and sell goods, and they give a practical demonstration in New York. A friend of mine that was with me in New York just a month ago was telling me. I would like to get their address.

Yours truly,
J. D. MILLS.

The "Grocery World" never heard of any such plan or service as this. Has any subscriber?

Two Reports of the Baltimore Canned Goods Market.

No. 1.

Baltimore, Md., Aug. 16, 1907.
Editor "Grocery World."

Dear Sir:—Continued favorable weather for the growing crop gives further encouragement to the canners of tomatoes. The receipts in this market for canning purposes have increased largely in the last few days, and the quality of the tomatoes, of course, improves as the near-by crop ripens up. The demand for the new pack for prompt shipment comes from nearly all sections, and the canners are getting their order books pretty well filled with orders for August shipment. They had sold futures quite extensively in the winter and spring months for shipment during September and October, and they now feel comfortable in their position, having a fair percentage of their average factory output still unsold to meet such conditions as may arise before the canning season ends. This market will be the chief source of supply during August, and for that reason we anticipate a very active business in tomatoes.

The entire line of canned vegetables was again strong and fairly active all week. The leaders were string beans, seconds peas, standard peas, corn, sweet potatoes and spinnach. There does not seem to be a weak spot in the entire list of vegetables.

Further disappointment has been unexpectedly experienced in the peach market. Instead of increased receipts of the fruit there was a falling off, and the canners had to pay higher prices for it. The reverse of that was expected. Any two of the large canners could easily handle all the peaches that have arrived in Baltimore on any day this season, so far. None of our packers will, just now, accept orders for straight carload lots of any one grade of peaches at fixed prices, and, on the other hand, very few jobbers seem willing to buy that quantity at the prevailing high cost. About as fast as any peaches of any grade are offered for sale, willing buyers stand ready to take them, and it is more a question of getting the goods than of getting a price on them. Small purchases repeated when necessary seems to be the best policy. Standard strawberries advanced 10c. dozen, and blackberries and blueberries are stronger. Spot pears are getting scarce. Apples are firmer, and so are pineapples. Cove oysters are nearly sold out.

Yours truly,
THOS. J. MEEHAN & CO.

No. 2.

Baltimore, Md., Aug. 16, 1907.
Editor "Grocery World."

Dear Sir:—Quite a few tomatoes are coming into Baltimore from Jersey, and some pretty good goods are being packed.

We are having a good demand for spot tomatoes. Orders are not large but they are coming in rather freely, and the market this week has been quite active.

The situation on tomato future is unchanged. The crop conditions are reported excellent though of course at this stage of the game it is useless to make any predictions about the size of the pack.

The situation here on peaches is in very unsatisfactory shape. There are no peaches coming in worth talking about, and as a consequence packers will not make any prices. A few small sales were made this week as high as $1.75 per dozen for second yellows, and $2.00 per dozen for standard yellows. These prices, however, are not being quoted, and we are not in a position to make any prices on peaches, either for spot or future delivery.

Peas—We are having an excellent demand, and seconds and standards are very nearly cleaned up. We have sold out a number of packers this week of all the second Junes they had at 80 cents per dozen, and the best brands are no longer obtainable at this price.

The situation on berries is in very strong shape. There has been some advance in the price of strawberries and gooseberries. Stocks of these goods are light especially strawberries.

Pie grated pineapple is pretty nearly cleaned up. Other grades pineapple are in strong shape. o. 2 fancy sliced and grated is arce.

Yours truly,
THOS. G. CRANWELL & CO.

overnment Too Sharp for Food Manufacturers.

The United States Government s not going to give enterprising manufacturers any chance from ow on to say that their goods ave been found pure by the Department of Agriculture; not ven in fact to say that they have een passed by the Government. A peculiarly shrewd form letter as been framed in order to avoid this. When a sample has been taken from a dealer and found to be legal, the dealer receives the following communication:—

U. S. Dept. of Agriculture,
Office of the Secretary,
Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir:—You are hereby notified that a specimen labeled "——— brand of coffee, high grade, strictly pure, ——— & Co., N. Y., purchased from ———, of ———, as coffee on ———, 1907, by an authorized inspector of this Department, and designated by him coffee, has been inspected and analyzed, and that no further action regarding this sample will be taken in connection with the enforcement of the Food and Drugs Act of June 30, 1906.

Respectfully,
JAMES WILSON,
Secretary.

AMONG THE TRADE.

Guarding the public against bad meats, the inspectors of the Bureau of Health during the past week condemned 3,613 pounds of meat. The inspectors visited 655 stores, 52 abattoirs, 55 wholesale meat houses, 15 storage houses and 15 markets. In the places visited 25 stores and 8 abattoirs were declared to be in an unsanitary condition. In every case the proprietors when notified complied with the conditions imposed by the department.

Your Profit, and That's All.

Every grocer sells chocolate and cocoa—his customers must have it. No matter whose he sells, he makes his profit and no more. He has no good reason for recommending one brand instead of another, so he hands out what his customers ask for.

The Knickerbocker Chocolate Co., of New York, are giving grocers a real reason for trying to push the sale of Barker's Hasty Lunch Chocolate, Blue Ribbon and Bedford Cocoas. For making a point to give these particular goods to their trade when no special brand is asked for and for recommending them when some other brand is asked for.

They are the only chocolate manufacturers who are using their advertising appropriation to buy valuable merchandise to give to grocers to reward them for their efforts.

The quality of Barker's Hasty Lunch Chocolate, Bedford and Blue Ribbon Cocoas cannot be excelled; they are certain to please everybody who is induced to buy them, and, still more important, every case of these goods carries Universal Coupons for the grocer. These coupons are exchangeable for almost any article of merchandise a grocer may want. They are the same as cash.

When it is possible for a grocer to sell not only as fine chocolate and cocoa as there is on the market and not only make his profit and please his trade, but get a roll-top desk, a new set of harness, standard scales, or even a new delivery wagon or a piano, isn't he short-sighted if he doesn't do his best to push the sale of these particular goods?

Why be satisfied with the profit alone if you can get a premium besides?

Year after year for fourteen years we have been shipping the same people Forbes' Indexed Coupon Books. Get the habit. See adv.

Let's Do Straight Business

We contend that all canned goods packers should sell on a 100 per cent. delivery contract; that is deliver all they sell and not 50 per cent., 75 per cent. or 20 per cent.

That is the only sane and sensible way to do business. It is the only way that can give either the jobber or the retailer a square deal.

We lead off with Blue Bell and Clover Farm canned goods, which are sold to the jobber on straight 100 per cent. contracts. The jobber gets all he buys, you, his customer, get all you buy. Oh, the satisfaction we all have in doing business that way!

If you are in favor of reforming one of the loosest business methods extant and at the same time of protecting yourself from loss every time a pack is short, specify Blue Bell and Clover Farm—the finest Maryland canned goods of their grade packed.

"I'll Take Ginger Ale"

It's odd how many people prefer ginger ale to all other drinks, and who never drink anything else from one year to the next.

This has made an enormous trade for ginger ale in comparison with other soft drinks.

When you sell ginger ale sell the brand which every expert admits is the best—Clicquot Club. Not an imported ale, but guaranteed the equal of the finest imported at every point. Made in Massachusetts, in the cleanest factory in America, and by experts from the finest and purest materials.

One reason for the fact that practically all grades of canned salmon will this season rule higher than last reveals the curious conditions surrounding the employment of labor in the salmon packing district. One of the largest packers of Sockeye salmon, which is the grade between Columbia River and red Alaska, has two factories located, as most salmon canneries are, somewhat far from any centre of population. In order to assure himself of the labor necessary to operate these canneries, the packer must contract for it far in advance of his actual need, at a time when he has no idea whether he will require a single man. If with all this labor on his hands the run of fish should prove a failure it means and repeatedly has meant an enormous loss, for the laborers must be paid anyway, else not a man will sign the contract or work at the plant next year. This particular packer's losses have been so heavy through this condition that he claims to have sunk, through both plants, as much as $70,000! This year he will run neither plant, one having been leased and the other closed entirely. The Sockeye salmon packers claim to be able to foretell with some accuracy what the production will be, from the fact that past experience has shown that every fourth year is a large one. Naturally, however, this standard often goes astray.

Window Dressing for Grocers

In this department from now on will appear each week suggestive articles regarding the proper use of the retail grocer's window. An endeavor will be made to deal with the subject practically, in other words, to show grocers how they can turn their windows into a money-making feature of their business. Subscribers are invited to make free use of the department by submitting both queries or suggestions.

A Clever Soap Window for Summer.

BY CHARLES M. STEELE,
Assistant Advertising Manager National Cash Register Co.

A window with a figure representing a child has an element of human interest that will attract almost every one who passes your store. The display shown in the picture can be easily and inexpensively made.

Secure a small bath tub, fill it two-thirds full of water. Place a screen, as shown in the picture, fasten a doll to make it appear that a child is peeping around th screen in readiness for her bat

On the floor of the windo stretch a rug. Drop a Turkis towel carelessly and place son cakes of soap, hit or miss, abou the window, being careful not t crowd.

The sign shown in the windo would be appropriate for h weather.

Probably you can borrow th bath tub and screen from loc merchants.

The only expense, then, woul be that of the card.

It Makes TRADE and It Makes MONEY

These are the two most important things to the grocer. To sell goods that make trade at a profit that makes money for them. Spring Garden Tea at 60 cents per pound will please nearly everybody who tries it, and you can make 160 per cent. profit at these prices:—

In 100-lb. Barrels		18	cents per lb. net
In 5-lb. Silver Bags	Packed in cases containing 100 Pounds	19	cents per lb. net
In 1-lb. Silver Bags		19½	cents per lb. net
In ½-lb. Silver Bags		20	cents per lb. net
In ¼-lb. Silver Bags		21	cents per lb. net

Thomas Martindale & Co., Philadelphia, Pa.

"THE BOTTOM AS GOOD AS THE TOP"

Our Apelpi Evaporated Apples are a prime grade of New York fruit, selected from the best flavored and matured apples.

The square cartons are lined with waxed paper and their contents are guaranteed to be as fine as anything in the market.

Every piece of fruit is hand picked and must be perfect before it goes into our machines.

The result is a product for which the demand is not only enormous, but constantly growing.

H. COWAN & SON Distributers — 28 So. Front Street Philadelphia, Pa.

If the Butter Don't Suit Give Back the Money

As wholesale distributers of Gurnse Butter we give you this public authority to refund the money in case any one of your customers who buys Gurnse Butter doesn't like it. Have you the slightest doubt you can sell Gurnse Butter with a refunding guarantee like this?

Gurnse Butter is a clean, pure, wholesome creamery butter, without garlic or any other strong flavor—the sort of an all-the-year-round brand that makes a splendid leader.

Ritter's Guaranty

In compliance with the rules and regulations for the enforcement of the Food and Drugs Act published by the Commission appointed for this purpose, we have filed a guaranty covering all our products with the Agricultural Department in Washington under the serial number 1017.

In the future all our products will be labeled in accordance with Regulation Nine as follows: Guaranteed under the Food and Drugs Act, June 30, 1906, No. 1017.

This guaranty is sufficient and covers every sale we make and no individual guaranties are necessary.

It has always been our aim to manufacture pure and wholesome food, to comply with existing laws and to protect all who buy our products, and we shall carry out this principle in the future.

We hope to deserve your continued confidence and patronage.

WHERE the GLASS JAR COMES IN

The glass jar in which Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa—and that only—is packed offers the entering wedge to a sale, because it is unusual.

No woman ever saw cocoa packed in glass before; the sight is novel; she asks about it, and if you help a little, she buys.

Bought once, Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa will always be bought again, for it has a flavor which has never been successfully imitated. Our exclusive making process removes the bad, develops the good, and the result is the smoothest, most delicious drinking cocoa on the market.

This Has It

Foreigners have a knack of preparing food specialties with a flavor that we on this side can't seem to get. Take Bismarck Heringe, a canned fish specialty that we import, and whose packing we control. It is cured in pure vinegar and pure spices, and nothing else, and has an enticing flavor that brings back the consumer time and time again.

There is nothing like it in this country, and if you want something exclusive, you ought to put it in.

The GREAT Ramly

Is the one spelled R-A-M-L-Y, the finest Turkish cigarette ever made to sell for 10 cents. So good, other cigarettes are made to look like it, so they will sell on the Ramly's reputation.

If you want to give your customers an ideal smoke, sell them the Ramly. You won't have to tell them about it the second time—they'll ask for it.

THE THREE LABOR SAVERS

Porcella, Radax and Tilo

Porcella is the greatest thing ever made for cleaning porcelain tubs. It is the only thing of the kind ever endorsed by the plumbing trade.

Radax is used for the same purposes as borax, but it has six times the strength. It will actually take ink out of a board floor.

Tilo is a preparation for cleaning tile. It makes it just like new. No matter what it may be stained with, Tilo will remove it.

We are giving a generous quantity of Universal Coupons with all three products to dealers to reward them for pushing these goods. An additional reward will be pleased customers.

MARKED "ENTERPRISE"

Grocers who are posted will not accept a Coffee Mill unless it bears the name "ENTERPRISE." The excellence of the grinders has been proven by many years' efficient service. The strength of their construction cuts out the expense of repairs, and the beauty of their finish makes them an ornament in the store. Get our catalogue at once, illustrating every desirable kind of Rapid Grinding and Pulverizing Mills, from the smallest hand mills up to the most powerful electrically driven mills.

Grocer's Refrigerator

Every Grocer intends to own a

McCRAY REFRIGERATOR

some time. That time should be NOW. Another year without a McCRAY REFRIGERATOR means you are allowing a useless waste of ice and loss of goods to go on, thus cutting down your profits.

Did you ever consider how many customers you may be losing by selling them butter that they think "Don't taste just right?"

A McCRAY REFRIGERATOR keeps butter and milk sweet and pure. They are perfect refrigerators and will, in a short time, repay their cost through saving of butter and other provisions, and of ice. They are sold entirely on their merits.

McCRAY REFRIGERATORS ARE GUARANTEED

We also build coolers for Meat Markets, Hotels, Restaurants, etc.—in fact for any purpose.

We can here give you but a faint idea of the McCRAY REFRIGERATORS. Let us send you our catalog No. 64, showing our large line of grocers' boxes from which you can make a selection.

WRITE FOR OUR CATALOGS: No 64 for Grocers, No. 57 for Meat Markets, No. 46 for Hotels, Restaurants, Public Institutions, etc., No. 81 for Residences.

Tell Your Customers They Needn't Be Bothered by Bugs

The famous Egyptian Deodorizer is put up in little boxes containing a dozen cylinders and a little stand to hold them. One of these cylinders placed in the stand and lit will diffuse a most delightful fragrance throughout a house, driving away mosquitoes, flies, moths and other insects, making the atmosphere hygienically pure and sanitary. Make a pyramid of a case of Egyptian Deodorizers, light one, and every customer you have will buy. Universal coupons packed in every case for the dealer.

DO YOU HAVE { A Delivery Wagon? A Telephone? A Cash Register?

These are secondary considerations nowadays. The essential thing is MODERN FIXTURES—to display and sell goods. You cannot have this without

Walker Bins

A catalog telling all about them will be mailed on request.

WALKER PATENT PIVOTED BIN CO.

No Friends Among the Wheelwrights

Wheelwrights don't think much of the "J. M." delivery wagon; it doesn't make enough money for them. No wagon pays fewer visits to the repair shop, or makes its visits shorter.

The most celebrated delivery wagon made—the best wagon ever built for the grocery trade. Strong as iron, yet easy-running; finest steel tires, and wheels from second-growth hickory.

Trouble Over the Philadelphia Meat License Act

Bureau of Health Contends That It Includes All Manner of Meat, Poultry and Game Products, Even Mince-meat, and That All Dealers in Such Things Must Pay License. Health Bureau Chief Permits Attorney Representing Trade Interests to File Brief for City Solicitor. Latter's Opinion to Be Obtained Before Cases Are Brought.

There is probably trouble ahead for the Philadelphia grocery trade, both wholesale and retail, over the local meat inspection act, approved April 26, 1907. The act applies to Philadelphia alone, and places all handlers of and dealers in meats, poultry, game, fish and shellfish under the supervision of the Bureau of Health, and compels them to pay a license fee of $1 for each store or place of business occupied.

The text of the act in question was published at the time it was approved, but it is repeated now in order to make clearer the following statement of the situation:

An act to provide for the licensing and regulating of slaughter houses, shops, wagons and places where meats, poultry, fish, game and shellfish are prepared for use as food or stored or exposed for sale in cities of the first class in this Commonwealth, and providing penalties for any violation of any regulation governing the same.

Section 1. Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, in General Assembly met, and it is hereby enacted by the authority of the same, That no place, building or part of any building, or any wagon in cities of the first class in this Commonwealth shall be used for the slaughter of animals or poultry or for the storage or preparation or exposure for sale of meats, fish, game or shellfish without first obtaining a license from the Bureau of Health.

Sec. 2. A license permitting the use of premises, buildings or parts of buildings or wagons for the slaughtering of animals and poultry and dressing the same or for the storage, sale or preparation for sale of meats, poultry, fish, game or shellfish may be granted to any person, firm or body corporate in cities of the first class by the Bureau of Health upon application for such license, provided that the premises, buildings or parts of buildings or wagons to be used for the purposes specified conform to the regulations established by the Board of Health. Further provided, that a separate license shall be issued for each place used for the purpose herein specified.

Sec. 3. The Board of Health in cities of the first class is hereby empowered to enact rules and regulations governing the conditions under which animals or poultry may be slaughtered and dressed or meats, poultry, fish, game and shellfish may be prepared for use as food or stored or exposed for sale. Such rules and regulations shall provide for the proper sanitary equipment of the buildings or parts of buildings or premises so used, and also for the cleanly and sanitary maintenance and conduct of such establishments or wagons used.

Sec. 4. Licenses when issued shall be valid for not more than one year; shall not be transferable either as to the person or place, and may be revoked at any time by the Board of Health for failure to comply with the rules and regulations established by the Board of Health.

It shall be the duty of every licensee to post and keep posted a printed copy of this act and of the license granted under it in the place for which the license is granted and where the said license is granted for the use of any building or part of building; said posting shall be in the principal and most public room of said building or part of building. A fee of $1 shall be paid to the Bureau of Health for said license.

Sec. 5. Any person who violates any of the provisions of this act or refuses to comply with any of the requirements or regulations of the Board of Health made in accordance with the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction shall be punished by fine of not less than $5 nor more than $100.

Sec. 6. All acts or parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

The trouble, if any, will come from the fact that the Philadelphia Bureau of Health has taken the position that the terms "meats, poultry, fish, game and shellfish" include everything made wholly or partly from meat, such as canned meats, dried beef, hams, and all other provisions, sausage, scrapple and mince-meat. If this construction is correct, every retail grocer, whether he sells fresh meats, poultry, etc., or not must still take out a license for selling canned meats, provisions, mince-meat, etc., and bring himself under the constant supervision of the Bureau of Health.

Elton J. Buckley, Esq., attorney, representing certain trade interests, had a conference on this subject with Dr. A. C. Abbott, Chief of the Bureau, during the week. The medical chief took the very radical position that the act had the above broad scope, while the attorney contended that "meats, poultry, fish, game and shellfish" meant simply those products in their fresh form. After a considerable argument the chief made the concession that no attempt would be made to enforce the law against any of the products named until a brief to be prepared by Mr. Buckley should be submitted to the City Solicitor and his opinion secured for the guidance of the bureau.

This brief has since been filed with the Health Bureau, and it will be laid before the City Solicitor at the earliest possible moment. In brief it takes the position that the word "meats" includes only fresh meat, as in the use of the term "meats" by the trade it is always understood that only fresh meats are meant, dried beef, hams, etc., being known as provisions, and sausage, scrapple, etc., as "meat food products," which should have been named in the act if they were to be included. Also that the act is obviously aimed for the safeguarding of perishable products, such as fresh poultry, fish, game and shellfish, and fresh meat, and not aimed at non-perishable products such as tinned meats, dried beef, etc., which are already protected by the interstate commerce and food laws.

Why Vanilla Is High.

Member of One of the Largest Concerns in the United States Says the Federal Food Law Largely Increased the Demand. Contends, However, That Present Prices, Though Much Above a Year Ago, Are Not Unreasonably High Under the Circumstances.

The fact of the vanilla situation is that the present values are not by any means excessively high. They only seem so to those who compare, without going further, to-day's prices with the abnormally low figures of a year or so ago, when the article was bringing less on the market than the cost of production. Within the past ten years the finest grades of Mexican beans, which are now quoted at $5.50 to $6.25 per pound, have brought as high as $13 to $15 per pound, according to length and cure. Of course, the latter prices were abnormally high, but they show the possibilities of the case and the relation thereto of the present situation.

The advance from the abnormally low level of a year ago came as a natural and necessary reaction. It came at a time when consumer would in any ev have bought rather more fr than usual, because of the exig cies of the Federal pure food l which not only threatened to terfere with the sale of many the absurdly cheap so-called tracts under the labels that w being used upon them, but wh actually called for an increas over 50 per cent. in the stren of the "standard" extract. A once the advance began, there sued a scramble to provide cost supplies against future wa as far ahead as possible, with natural result that the upw movement proceeded much m rapidly and strongly than would have under ordinary c ditions.

As to the "large number manufacturers who were u vanillin" and who were "smo out," as you put it, we kn nothing; but we think that are under a misapprehension some sort. Of course van like almost any material of a stitutionary nature, has been used for fraudulent purposes; the proportion employed in way never was anything slight—a small fraction of enormous quantity of this re meritorious material annu consumed. And the consump this year, notwithstanding th leged smoking out, and in the of the great uncertainty at the ginning of the food law agita as to where the manufact stood with regard to raw terials of this description, been fully as great as ever at steadily increasing.

obbers Meet to Discuss Trade Questions. Retailers Still Warm Over Governor's Vetoes. Debate Over Park & Tilford's Methods. New Salmon Prices Named at Last. The Week's General Trade News.

cial correspondence of "Grocery World."

New York, August 30, 1907.

A special meeting of the New ork State Wholesale Grocers' ssociation was held yesterday to t on questions in relation to oels and jobbers' guarantees, d on proposed changes in the nstitution. The meeting was of executive character, nobody cept members being admitted. One of the members said that e attendance was thoroughly presentative, there being pres- t jobbers from all the cities in e State and a large showing om this city, indicating the earn- t and harmonious manner in hich the wholesale grocers are ideavoring to solve the prob- ms presented by the changing ws and changing public senti- ent on food subjects.

It has become clear that the tail grocers' associations here ill give a great deal of attention the next few months to the sues involved in the New York tate food bill and the wife's lia- ility bill, both of which were etoed by Governor Hughes.

New bills of a similar character re to be presented next January hen the Legislature meets again. his has been declared by L. J. allanan, the chairman of the egislative Committee of the New ork Retail Grocers' Union, who now preparing arguments to eet the objections that have een raised to the bills. While e has been a warm and out- poken admirer of the Governor, Ir. Callanan asserts that the two etoes were mistakes.

Especially strong is his dissent rom the reasons given by the overnor for disapproving the tate food bill. The principal eason was apparently because he bill provided for placing the esponsibility for violations on the manufacturer or packer and re- easing the retailer, provisions bout the same as those in the ederal food law. This reopens n this State an issue that was ought out over and over again efore the enactment of the na- tional law, and the retailers were under the impression that they had heard the end of it.

It is suggested that the Governor, while seeing some technical objection to the bill, was not familiar with the practical side of the question. So often have Mr. Callanan and the other members of the Legislative Committee argued on the question that it would seem there is nothing new to be said, but in order to carry the point the arguments will be re-marshalled and again presented when the Legislature meets again. In the meantime considerable educational literature will be distributed.

It has been said repeatedly by Mr. Callanan and his associates that it is an absurdity to hold a retail grocer responsible for the condition of food in the packing of which he has had no part. He will say it again in a letter which he is now writing and he will review in detail the situation.

The Governor's reasons for vetoing the wife's liability bill seems also untenable to the chairman of the Legislative Committee. The Governor pointed out that the grocer may withhold credit if he desires, or he may give credit to either wife or husband or to both, by having an understanding on the subject at the time that the goods are sold and the credit is given. To make a change in the law would only complicate matters, the Governor said. The grocers maintain that, on the contrary, the bill would fix the responsibility on the wife ordering groceries and other merchandise when she is financially responsible and the husband turns out to be irresponsible.

Substitution is an old subject, but it has been brought up again by a discussion as to the methods of Park & Tilford in not selling any proprietary brands of tea or coffee and selling the various grades simply under the company's name. The company's advertising man has written quite a long article holding that the company's practice in selling in this way is in no sense a substitution for the proprietary brands. The head of another retail house which makes a specialty of tea and coffee said that if he had the trade of the wealthier class of people he would sell little or no proprietary brands of tea or coffee because he would build up a demand for brands of his own.

A retailer, who seemed to voice the opinions of others as well as himself, said: "I have the proprietary brands on my shelves, but I try to sell my own blends in preference. That is not substitution. I look on deception as the real basis of what the trade calls deception, as when a customer asks for an article and something else is given, the difference not being observed at the time. But if the grocer has tact enough to change the customer's mind, and does so, that is something that is within the grocer's rights. Many are glad to get the advice of the grocer as to the articles that he sells. He may not keep in stock the identical article that customers intended to buy, but he very properly offers something else that he believes will prove satisfactory."

Several who are active in the affairs of the grocers' societies expressed themselves to this effect when their opinions were asked.

Notices were received to-day in the wholesale trade of the new prices on salmon, as agreed upon by the Alaska Packers' Association and other packers. The new price of red Alaska salmon is $1.15 a dozen, f. o. b. coast, which amounts to $1.28 laid down in New York. The price a year ago was 95 cents. The spot price here is $1.28. The reason given for the advance is that the present pack, amounting to 1,100,000 cases, is about 700,000 cases short of that of last year. In view of the conditions, the grocery jobbers seem inclined to think that the new price is quite as favorable to them as they could have hoped. The retailers will, of course, feel the advance when they order.

The old Crane & Martin Co., cocoa and chocolate manufacturers at 309 East 22d street, has been placed this week in bankruptcy by creditors, after being conducted since March last by a committee of five of the creditors. An acknowledgment of the company's insolvency was filed in court, the document bearing the signatures of Lawrence Pierpont as president and Rudolph Sievert as treasurer. The liabilities were estimated, when the committee took charge, at $50,000 and the assets at $27,000. Evariste A. Martin, who was an expert in the manufacture of cocoa and started the business thirty years ago, died in May at the age of eighty years. The old firm was incorporated thirteen years ago with an authorized capital stock of $50,000.

A decision in relation to the duty on milk chocolate imported in large quantities by Lamont, Corliss & Co., was handed down Monday by Judge H. M. Somerville, of the Board of United States General Appraisers, and an appeal is to be taken to the full board, whose decision, in this kind of an issue, is final. The question is as to the valuation at which duty will be assessed. A discount of 6 per cent. is allowed by the general appraiser and the importers asked for an 8 per cent discount. The evidence showed that the importers buy and import Peter's milk chocolate in quantities valued upward of 400,000 francs and this is the reason that the larger discount is allowed them by the manufacturers. The ordinary purchases of importers is in lots varying in values from 1,000 to 25,000 francs. The general appraiser holds that the valuation must be fixed according to the prices paid for "usual wholesale quantities" and that it is contrary to the letter and to the spirit of the law to allow lower valuation to especially large buyers.

The ruling of the Department of Agriculture, holding that labels on imported food products must be printed in English has caused an animated discussion in the Italian Chamber of Commerce in this city and resolutions have been adopted asking for a modification of the rule. -operation in getting a change the rule. The Italian importers laim that the rule is a hardship, ecause it discourages the impor- tion of all food products except ose especially packed for this untry. It is pointed out that an merican buyer could formerly ke advantage of foreign market conditions, such as an occasional surplus of some article, and make an advantageous purchase for the American trade. The rule, it is said, works against the smaller importer and in favor of the large concerns for which goods are expressly packed.

[The "Grocery World" has come into possession of a series of "Mutual Aid Sheets," which are weekly little talks issued regularly to its clerks by one of the large retail grocery stores of the East. The talks are typewritten and a copy is enclosed in each clerk's pay envelope. They are so soundly practical and so useful generally that it is this journal's purpose to publish them weekly or bi-weekly for the edification of other clerks as well as other grocers who have clerks.—ED.]

SUGGESTIONS.

We want more written sugges- ons from you about the running this business.

We wrote you about this some me since and many of you re- onded creditably at that time. eep it up.

MOCHA AND JAVA COFFEE.

A foolish impression is abroad at we don't handle the genuine Mocha or Java coffee. You must eet this with a prompt, but olite denial. You are selling a enuine Arabian Mocha and a adang Interior Java, just as the n reads. Either or both coffees ay at any time be submitted to y expert your doubter may ame.

In addition to this, the manager olds a letter written by the head the largest importing house in ew York verifying the genuine- ess of both these coffees.

"Stand pat" for the real thing.

KEEP CLEAN.

This is a rather delicate sub- ct, but it's opportune and there- re a mutual aid thought.

sponge bath should be taken is time of year every day.

"A sweaty smell" is distressing to most people. Avoid it as you would a tobacco breath.

Moral and physical wholesomeness of person we insist on.

The writer indirectly heard of a case last week where a woman cut her order in two to get away from a salesman who disregarded the bath. It did not happen in our store, though.

BISCUIT TIME.

You can do a whole lot with crackers and biscuits these days. We have a beautiful line of the National, as well as Huntley & Palmer English goods. Suggest the nicest ones for ice cream. The less rich kinds for the picnic. Any of these for the luncheon or tea table. It needs only a word or two. Many of our customers don't know that we carry the Dr. Johnston Educator line.

Take it for granted that people forget the advertisements over night. Freshen their memory. Notice how many say "Oh yes, that's so, let me see those you advertised." Jar cheese comes in here. 10-15-25. Puts the finish to the saltines.

In my more than forty years' experience in the retail grocery business I have always been greatly aided by and guided by trade papers. In these my experience has been large and varied, but I can honestly say that as now conducted the "Grocery World," of Philadelphia, is the best and most useful of its kind that I have ever known.—Percy M. Reese, 1201 Charles street, Baltimore, Md.

The Hotel Patrons' Demand

A coffee that satisfies on a hotel table is a good coffee and will stand up under any test you can give it.

That's because hotel patrons are supercritical. They expect more than they get at home; in fact they expect perfection.

Hotel Astor Coffee is the year-in-and-year-out brand of some of the most exclusive hotels in New York City. They never think of buying anything else — they wouldn't dream of it.

The success of this coffee under this exacting test is really the reason that led us to push it through the grocery trade. We have a plan to increase your high-grade coffee trade. May we tell you about it? A postal request is enough.

Into the Gimbel Camp.

Messrs. Gimbel Bros., of the "only good grocery" fame, republished in their usual page advertisement last Wednesday the article which appeared in the "Grocery World" of August 26th, under the caption "The Truth About Short Weight." Accompanying this appeared certain comment which needs discussion:

> The "Grocery World" was so short-sighted as to believe that everything we did had a mean, ulterior motive. We hadn't time to change its views—we're righting wrongs that count; we're making our fights in the interest of your stomach and purse.
> But, on the question of dishonest weights, the "Grocery World" had to come into our camp—and, with the zeal of a new convert, it talks vigorously in a signed editorial that we reprint herewith.
>
> But only a little while ago it contended that our fight wasn't for honesty, but against the little grocer. Of course, that isn't so. Your neighborhood grocer—your neighbor—can't fight these abuses. He is the victim of circumstances. He might possibly fight, if he chose, within his organization—the Retail Grocers' Association—a combination that is claimed to help by grouping small orders.
> This association is surely guilty of conniving with the short-weight lard men. Here is the wording of one of its lard-can labels:
>
> "This lard is put up as a strictly pure article, and is guaranteed to contain nothing but what results from the rendering of good, pure, wholesome hog fat. Our bond, filed with the Retail Grocers' Association, for One Thousand Dollars, to be forfeited if any adulteration can be proven."
> And then the packer stamps it "3 lb. gross," while at the price we found in the market the lard is costing the consumer over 17c. for a real pound.
> Making the package still more seductive, it bears the reassuring words: "U. S. inspected and passed under the Act of Congress of June 30, 1906."
> For the present, until the packers can convert their can-making machinery, we are having lard for this store packed in cans that we furnish—and the lard, passing the full test for quality, we label "Lenox." Our cans hold three pounds of actual lard. 42c. a can—which is 14c. a lb.

Life holds few more amusing conceptions than the spectacle of Gimbel Bros. tenting alone in the "camp" of honesty. To save their souls, these Gimbels can't seem to be decent or square. "The 'Grocery World' had to come into their camp," they say, and speaks on short weight "with the zeal of a new convert." The "Grocery World" spoke its mind on short-weight groceries long before the Gimbels pushed their way into Philadelphia trade. But what if it now mentioned the matter for the first time? Let the "Grocery World" inform the Gimbels that there is no difference of opinion as to the ethics of short weight. No man deserves credit, no matter how much credit he claims, for being simply honest, and the man who does claim distinction on that ground is either not honest at all or a plain fool.

What an insight this gives into the peculiar moral code of these people—that they are something wonderful because they don't believe in stealing! Possibly they surprise themselves that they should be advocating any such doctrine.

The 5,000 retail grocers of Philadelphia have learned much from Gimbel Bros. Understanding thoroughly the value and good faith of the concern's grocery advertising, they have naturally judged the other departments thereby and have stayed away from the Gimbel store.

The Philadelphia Retail Grocers' Association is conniving with short-weight lard men, say Gimbel Bros. What utter rot! Nobody in the grocery business anywhere is or could be more scrupulously finical concerning the character of goods handled than the Philadelphia Retail Grocers' Association. To get in there an article must be free of the faintest suspicion of even technical wrong. And this constant watchfulness has results, for in the last three years practically no members of the association have been fined for breaking the food law, while Gimbel Bros. have been mulcted many times.

Destroying Groceries.

The monthly bulletin of the Pennsylvania Dairy and Food Department now contains several pages of editorial matter aimed to educate the retail grocer in the knowledge of the State food laws. The motive is excellent and in the main it is being worthily carried out. Here and there, however, statements appear which because they seem scarcely well considered, should never appear in an official publication.

For instance, in a paragraph reproduced elsewhere the Department advises retailers to destroy all goods for which they have no guarantee, and which have been in stock so long as to lose identification. Couched so broadly, this is scarcely good advice. It is all very well to destroy illegal goods, since they may not be safely sold, yet goods that are old and unguaranteed and unidentified are not necessarily illegal; they may, on the contrary, meet the law perfectly. Would it not be saner, therefore, before destroying $100 worth of goods to spend possibly $10 in having them chemically analyzed?

This mild impeachment of the Department's advice seems warranted by the fact that in all probability many retailers treat the Department's suggestions as virtual commands.

The Illinois Regulations.

Nothing more important to the general grocery trade has come out in months than the rules and regulations governing the making of retailers' claims that the Illinois Wholesale Grocers' Association has adopted and is trying to induce other jobbers' associations to adopt. The full text of these appear in another column. They are long and must be studied to be understood. Quite aside from their character or value, all will agree that some regulations covering the relations between retailer and jobber are urgently necessary.
